Millions of Polish Workers Join 1-Hour Protest Strike

Washington Post Service
WARSAW — Millions of Polish workers Wednesday took part in a one-hour strike organized by the independent Solidarity trade union to protest the Communist govern-ment's economic policies and al-leged harassment of union activ-

Solidarity officials claimed that the nationwide strike, the biggest single action to be staged by the union in seven months, was a dramatic success. On the basis of re-ports from factories, mines and public transportation companies throughout Poland, the union's information agency in Warsaw said the protest had attracted between 90 and 100 percent support.

These figures were disputed by Communist Party officials. They did bowever, concede that many rank-and-file party members had joined the strike in defiance of instructions from the party leader-

The strike was denounced as a political provocation by the new Communist Party chief, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, at a meeting of the policy-making Central Committee in Warsaw. The army newspaper, Zolnierz Wolności, described it as "blackmail ... de-signed to push Poland into crises reminiscent of Hungary in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968," when reform movements were crushed by Soviet intervention.

Demonstration of Support

Western analysts saw the strike as an impressive demonstration of public support for Solidarity despite Poland's mounting economic difficulties and political tensions. It appeared to disprove sugges-tions that the union's standing in the country had been seriously undermined as a result of widespread food shortages.

The timing of the strike clearly complicated Gen. Januzelski's efforts to reshape the government and party leadership. Addressing the Central Committee, he indicated that major personnel changes had been postponed for the time

Action to Limit Strikes

Another party leader, Politburo member Kazimierz Barcikowski, raised the prospect of new, but still undefined action against Solidarity should the union not halt the industrial unrest now sweeping the country. He said the Sein would be taking action to limit strikes at its meeting on Friday.

Saudis Urge Arab Governments Not to Pressure Egyptian Leader

By Ihsan A. Hijazi

Vew York Times Service BEIRUT - Saudi Arabia has called for a reconciliation with Egypt and has urged Arab states not to bring pressure to bear on President Hosni Mubarak to force him to abrogate the peace treaty

The call was made Tuesday in a front page editorial in the Saudi newspaper Al Madina. All media in the Saudi kingom are under direct government control.

[West Germany and Saudi Ara-bia Wednesday called for support for the Egyptian president, a Bonn cording to Remers. [He said that Saudi Crown Prince Fahd had expressed his lor Helmut Schmidt during a brief stopover in Bonn on his way back from the North-South summit conference in Cancún, Mexico.

["They agreed that the new Egyptian president deserved trust. Both heads of government called for support for the political line of the Egyptian president," spokesman said.]

The Saudi newspaper said that Mr. Mubarak should be given a one-year grace period to put the Egyptian house in order.

We do not and must not expect
President Mubarak to abrogate the Camp David agreements at this time for a number of reasons which are understood by those acquainted with international convention," the newspaper said.

The editorial was taken by analysts here as evidence of the desire of conservative Arab regimes to reestablish relations with Cairo.

Similar Views in Kuwait

The press in Kuwait had expressed similar views. The leading Kuwaiti daily, As Siyassah, warned the Arabs that forcing Mr. Mubarak to renege on the peace Jerusalem as an excuse not to withdraw from the rest of the Sinai as scheduled in April.

Saudi Arabia and Kuwait were among the Arab states which severed all diplomatic, political and economie ties with Egypt in 1979 after the late President Sadat concluded the peace treaty with Is-

Analysis noted that the readiness by certain Arab regimes to forget the past with Egypt showed that they now take the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty as an accomplished fact.

However, other Arab governments and the Palestine Liberation Organization have taken an opposite stand, Iraq, Syria, Libya and the PLO have warned against any overtures toward Mr. Mubarak as long as he maintains his relations with the Israelis.

The Saudi stance on the Middle East has become a subject of controversy in the Arab world, which is now divided over the proposals presented in August by Crown Prince Fahd.

Syria, Libya, Algeria and Iraq eight-point plan, which called, among other things, for the creation of an independent Palestinian state on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip, currently under Israeli occupation, and recognition of the right of every state in the region to live in peace. It was assumed that the latter provision covered Israel.

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved President Reagan's record $8.5-billing AWACS sale to Saudi Arabia ng Wednesday. crowning an intensive lobbying effort that reversed long odds and delivered n stunning victory in the president's first major foreign poli-

The Senate rejected 52 to 48 a veto resolution that would have scrapped the sale of the sophisticated Airborne Warning and Control System radar planes and F-15 jet weapoury to the Saudis. The president needed 50 votes; a tie would have gone in him.

The House vited 301 in 111 against the package twn weeks ago, and as late as Tuesday. Senate op-ponents remained confident that they had more than enough support to do the same. For the sale in be blocked, both houses would have had to veto it by a majority of members voting.

Earlier, the president told the Senate in a letter that the sale is invaluable to U.S. security interests, "improving both our strategie posture and the prospects for peace in the Middle East."

But opponents called it a threat to Israel and fuel for a Middle East arms race, and said it posed a risk of losing secret AWACS and mis-sile technology to the Soviet Union or radical Arab nations if the Saugovernment were overthrown. Mr. Reagan called it a test of his command of U.S. foreign policy.

Soviet Ships Reported Off Sweden After Sub Is Grounded Near Base

STOCKHOLM - A Soviet naval farce of about 10 ships was reported to have appeared at Sweden's territorial limit Wednesday night, off the prohibited military zone where a Soviet submarine was stranded earlier in the day. Swedish anthorities ordered na-

Diplomatic conversations were reported under way after Sweden lodged a sharp protest against the submarine's illegal entry. The Swedish defense minister called the incident "the worst Soviet vio-lation of Swedish territorial waters in postwar years."

U.S. Planes in Greece, Instead of Heading North, Veer South to Listen In on Libya PAGE IS

Washington Post Service CLASSING ATHENS — Hardly a day goes by without a special U.S. Air Force electronics surveillance plane taxing out onto the runway of the Athens International Airport here and, between the busy comings and goings of regular commercial airlin ers, lumbering off into the sky over the blue Aegean Sea. The plane, of a generation that predates the so-phisticated AWACS (Airborne Warning and Air Control Systems) jets so much in the public debate these days, is one of two operating regularly from the U.S. Air Force base at Hellenikon, a facility so small and cramped by the mushrooming Athenian suburbs that its only available runway is that of the adjacent international sirport. The special U.S. planes have been flying out of here so long that their appearance on the runway among the commercial jetliners raises no more eyebrows than the latest charter flight from Stockholm arriving full of pale tourists seeking a tan on one of the nearby Mediterranean islands.

Neither is there any mystery that the jets' mission is one of electronic spying, listening to radio communications far beyond the frontiers of bostile territories it dare not fly over. But what is not generally known is that once the spy planes are in the air they rarely turn torth to listen in to radio conversations behind the borders of the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies as is normally believed.

Instead, more often than not, they veer south toward North Africa to listen in on communications in Col. Moamer Qadhafi's Libya, the Reatan administration's chief enemy in the Medi-

The electronic cavesdropping on Libya conducted from U.S. bases in Greece is not something U.S. officials have ever liked to talk about. Since the landslide victory of Premier Andreas Papandreou and his Pan-Hellenic Socialist movement in national elections 10 days ago, it is a subject that actually makes U.S. officials squirm.

There is good reason for their discomfiture. Mr.

Papandreon and his party, Pasok, ran for election on a platform that included as a major plank the closure of U.S. bases in Greece. Pasok's nationalistic and often neutralistic foreign policy also advocated Greece's withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Successive conservative Greek governments have defended the retention of the U.S. bases on the ground that they enhance the defense of the Atlantic alliance as well as Greece's own security from a common Communist threat from the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies to the north. But despite Washington's obsession with Libya, no stretch of the imagination can it be said to fall under NATO's mandate. It also is hardly viewed as a threat to Greece by Mr. Papandreou who has made close identification with the Third World, especially the Arab states like Libya that ring the eastern and southern edges of the Mediterranean, a canon of his foreign policy faith.

Having been sworn in a week ago as both pre-mier and defense minister, Mr. Papandreou should have learned by now in briefings from his defense chiefs that at least two of the U.S. bases he has so long challenged - the U.S. Air Force installation at Hellemkon and an Air Force-run fixed radio communications monitoring installa-tion near Heraklion on the island of Crete — are spending more time listening in on Libya than on NATO's Communist opponents in the torth.

Such news is not believed to have been gratifying to the new Socialist premier. In his only com-ment on the U.S. bases since his election, Mr. Papandreou told a U.S. television network interviewer earlier this week that he would not act "unilaterally" to close the bases and is ready to seek negotiations on the basis under which they could continue operations in the short term. He added, however, that he would insist on some form of Greek "control and information" on the bases to prevent "a military operation from Greek soil against any third country with which Greece has good relations."

By comparison with other U.S. bases abroad, the Greek installations that have fired so many political tempers are small. They contain about 3,500 U.S. military personnel and as many dependents. Most of the U.S. military presence is based in and around Athens where both the air base of Hellenikon and a U.S. Navy communications base at Nea Makri are situated. The other two bases are on opposite ends of the island of Crete: a U.S. Air Force radio monitoring installation outside of Heraklion and a Navy landing strip and fleet supply depot outside the Greek Navy base of Souda Bay, one of the Mediterranean's largest and most secure anchorages. Significantly, the first foreign diplomatic envoys to be granted an audience with Mr. Papandreou after his election were representatives of

Syria, Algeria, Iraq, the Palestine Liberation Organization and Libya. Before the windup of his campaign, Mr. Papandreou stated that he would be prepared to negotiate control of the bases and the basis under which his first talks Wednesday with U.S. Ambassador Monteagle Stearns. In comments after the meeting, neither man broached the question of U.S. bases in Greece, but Mr. Papandreou said in interviews later that he expected to begin negotiations early next year with the United States.

A conservative Athens daily, Kathimerini, said Wednesday that Mr. Papandreou may be invited to visit the United States before the end of the year. The newspaper said both governments considered it expedient that a meeting at the highest level take place before the opening of negotiations mational Herald Tribune PARIS - A detailed study of U.S. and Soviet systems for issuing orders in a ouclear war coocludes that it is impossible for either superpower to envisage waging and winning a limited outlear war.

Once a nuclear war started, the study says, leaders oo both sides probably would quickly lose the ability to control any escalation of bostilities as their aumand and control facilities were knocked out of action and leaders came under political pressure to act, according to the study.

proach to ouclear strategy — lies at the heart of the current Western debate about nuclear weapons. Disarmament groups bave accused the United States of adopting weapons and plans for a limited nuclear war in Europe.

This conclusion runs counter to the argument that the superpowers are making preparations for a ou-clear war confined to Europe. Such a strategy, the study says, is im-

Western strategists have contended that limited ouclear strikes have to be envisaged as part of the overall concept of deterrence, but Mr. Ball said that this is unrealistic. Leaflets in Haiti Call On Military to Rebel

The Associated Press PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti - A small plane has dropped thou-sands of leaflets over this capital city, calling oo the military to rebel against the president-for-life, Jean-Claude Duvalier, authorities say. An official spokesman said Tuesday that the leaflets were dropped early Monday and that police and soldiers were dispatched to clean them off city streets. According to the leaflets, a man named Bernard Sansaricq an-oounced the formation of a National Heitian Popular Party.

Hong Kong Trying to Reduce Tons of Litter HONG KONG — The government has launched a multimillion-dollar campaign aimed at eleaning up Hong Kong.

The goal is to rid the colony of the thousands of tons of garbage casually dropped or deliberately dumped on streets and into the harbor and to discipline the 5,000 people who are caught littering each month.

Some of Hong Kong's mess can be hlamed on the dust and dirt from construction sites that are just about everywhere in the colony: From hits and pieces that fall off the backs of trucks to the discarded material that inevitably accompanies building projects.

But much more accumulates from street hawkers and shopkeepers who illegally deposit their baskets of garbage at the most convenient spot, which is not usually an authorized dump.

And there are those who take the shortcut to garbage disposal in high rise apartment blocks by simply chucking it out of the window or down the stairwell.

The government has set aside 16 million Hong Kong dollars (about $3 million) for the 14-month campaign, plus 47 million Hong Kong dollars (about $8 million) for local administrations to buy and install new equipment.

To back op its campaign slogan, "Cleanlioess is a Way of Life," the government will increase penalties for littering, employ several bundred extra persons, extend the authority of those who can issue summonses on offenders and try to educate Hong Kong's 5 million people into being more tidy.

"We want the community to be ashamed to litter," said campaign coordinator Martin

He said that about 16,000 government officials would be involved in the campaign. He added that while the maximum fine for tossing litter in the street was 1,000 Hong Kong dollars ($165), the average fine imposed in court was 100 Hong Kong dollars ($16) and the cost of prosecuting 150 Hong Kong dollars ($25).

Hong Kong's garbage problem is probably oo worse than that of many other Asian cities. But the concentration of people in such a small area - with 4,850 people per square kilometer, it is one of the most densely populated places in the world - makes it more

Ahmed Salim appeared to have been eliminated Wednesday in his bid to become secretary general of the United Nations as other candidates prepared to present themselves.

In two rounds of secret balloting Wednesday in the Security Council, incumbent Kurt Waldheim was again vetoed. Diplomats said China had cast the veto. Mr. Salim was also vetoed; reportedly by the United States, and then fell short of the nine votes needed in the 15-nation security council. Representatives of member states of the Organization of African Unity, for whom he was official candidate, were expected to discuss whether to support another candidate, perhaps a Latin American.

The Security Council was recessed until Friday, and Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. chief delegate, appeared to open the door to other possibilities when she said she hoped the recess would be long enough to permit others to make clear that they would run for the office.

Pentagon Admits B-1 Carries Hidden Costs

By Morton Mintz

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The Defense Department has admitted that it has been promoting the 8-1 manned bomber program to Congress without disclosing that it expects to incur up to $1 billion in additional costs.

The admission, made at a Senate hearing Tuesday, came as House-Senate conferees neared final approval of the 1982 military authorization bill, which includes $2.43 billion in research and development costs for the B-1 program.

Under questioning by Sen. Carl Levin, Democrat of Michigan, Milton A. Margolis, head of the Pentagon's Cost Analysis Improvement Group, acknowledged that Congress had not been told of additional costs estimated by SenLevin at $500 million to $1 billion.

Sen. Levin also brought out that although "never a word has been breathed about it to the responsible congressional committees, the bill for the B-1 program will be further increased by "a whole host" of additional items, such as underestimates of certain testing and production costs. An aids to and production costs. An aide to Sen. Levin estimated the combined cost of the items at $3 billion or $4

The estimated cost of the 100aircraft program, approved by President Reagan Oct. 2, has been soaring. Sen. David H. Pryor, an Arkansas Democrat, recalled that Arkansas Democrat, recalled that early this year, Rockwell International, the prime contractor, put the cost at $11.9 billion. In May, the Air Force was figuring $15 billion to $18 billion. Then Pentagon officials upped the ante to $19.7 billion.

Now, Sen. Pryor said, "we hear estimates ranging from $20 billion to $30 billion."

Deputy Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci conceded to Sen. Pryor that the B-1's mission Sen. Pryor that the B-I's mission had yet to be formally defined but said it was "entirely appropriate" that the mission be changed as the nature of the threat changed.

GAO Update on Overruns

A House Government Operaoons subcommittee previously had reported that the average cost of the systems exceeded the original planning estimate by 31 percent in 1969 and by 98 percent in 1978. In an update done for Sen. Roth, the General Accounting Office said that as of June, 1981, the increase was 190 percent.

Backed by both Democratic and Republican committee members, Scn. Roth warned that what Scn. James K. Galbraith, executive director of the Joint Economic Committee, said the replies "sub-stantially clarify what the adminis-tration has in mind about the Persian Gulf." Mr. Galbraith added that "we believe their policies go beyond the Carter Doctrine," in which former President Jinnay Carter declared in January, 1980, that the United States would regard an attack on the Gulf as an assault on its "vital interests" and would repel such an attack by "any means necessary, including military force."

The Reuss report, which was compiled and printed last week and set for release in time for the Senate's vote Wednesday on the sale of AWACS, Airborne Warning And Control System, planes to Saudi Arabia was prefaced by a statement by the congressman that cast the policy as a major commit-ment of U.S. forces to repel a Sovi-ct attack on the oil fields of the region, "without significant assist-ance either from our allies or from the states in the Gulf region itself."

Reaganomics Gone Wrong

Less than three months after the triumphant enactment of President Reagan's gigantic money bills, his economic strategy seems to have lost its way. There is no longer a clear sense of the next step. The White House is anxiously negotiating with the congressional Republicans whom it commanded with great flair and confidence in the spring and summer. Republican senators are talking heretically about a tax increase. What has gone wrong?

From its beginning last winter, the Reagan program was based on excessively optimisuc forecasts. The day of reckoning arrived in August, in a way that illustrates the differences of perspective between Washington's political world and New York's financial markets. To people in Washington, including the president's adversaries, the passage of the budget reconciliation and tax bills demonstrated the strength of a secure president, very much in control. But in New York, the financial bouses' economists saw immediately that the tax cuts were very much larger than the budget cuts. To them, that meant future deficits beyond any president's control. Interest rates, already high, went higher. It was the interest rates that forced political Washington to acknowledge that the economy was not responding as the strategy bad prescribed.

When Congress reconvened in September, the administration was preparing to make further budget cuts - but there was no agreement within the administration on those cuts. The arithmetic pointed Ioward extraordinary cuts in programs that most people of both parties in Congress had no intenuon of cutting deeply. At that point, the nature of the president's opposition began to change. It was no longer centered on the disbeveled Democrats, who had lost the 1980 election and been heaten again in the crucial House votes on the summer's legislation. The serious opposition, polite but firm, began to come from senior Republicans in the Senate.

The original theory behind the Reagan policy held that tight money would bring down inflation, while a big tax cut would stimulate growth. Now, in the tenth month of the Reagan administration. Ihe first part of that theory is working — but not the second. Tight money bas meant high interest rates that are indeed bringing down the inflation rate, despite the jump last month in the erratic consumer price index. But it's happening in the most conventional, sad old way, with the high interest pushing the economy into a recession. There is no sign of any supply-side magic to give the country lower inflation and higher economic growth simultaneously.

To regain the iniuative, the administration will have Io provide Congress and the country with a plausible map of the future into which it wants to lead them. That word "plausible" means no economic mysticism this time, and no rope tricks. II means forecasts that are consistent with present experience, and it means a few more details about those unspecified hudget cuts.

The president still has time. At a guess, he has three months — until January, when he must publish the next budget and deliver his beginning-of-the-year messages. January will be his chance to recast and re-establish his program on a realistic basis. But it will probably be his last chance.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

U.S. Brawn Without Brain

The United States is about to launch a policy of unilateral disarmament in the worldwide contest of ideas. The administration proposes cuts in the revised State Department authorization hill that would devastate educational and cultural exchange.

Like most departments, the International Communication Agency has been asked to absorb an additional cut of 12 percent in its 1982 hudget. But instead of protesting or looking to its bureaucracy, it proposes that virtually the entire amount come out of educational and cultural programs.

Funds for exchange of students and scholars, for example, would be reduced from an already inadequate $79 million to $22 million. Academic exchanges with 61 countries would he eliminated altogether.

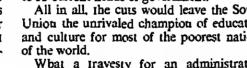

There would he no further support services for the more than 300,000 foreign students who require them to remain enrolled in American universities.

The justly famous, 35-year-old Fulbright fellowship program would end, except in a few countries that make special agreements for them. And the number of promising leaders brought to America by the International Visitor program would decline from 1.500 to 750, eliminating 75 countries entirely. This is the program that first showed American life to 33 current heads of government.

All in all, the cuts would leave the Soviet Union the unrivaled champion of education and culture for most of the poorest nations

What a travesty for an administration determined to spread its might and influence ahroad. To so shortchange contacts and communication - including the export of books, art. music, theater and drama - will have serious enough consequences in the short term. In the long run, the loss in understanding and human ties would he devastating. The trashing of these programs proclaims a policy of hrawn without brain.

A Few Fish Without a Sea

It takes some doing to recall bow so many Americans quaked during the Vietnam years at the menace they imputed to a tiny handful of terrorists who operated on American soil. True, we of the media undeniably deserve much of the responsibility for generating the alarm. There was in the air of the culture, however, a certain casual and profligate readiness to define terror or the thought of terror - there wasn't that much of the real thing around - not as an absolutely intolerable perversion hul as an exaggerated form of protest. And who, after all, could condemn protest against a society deemed to be so wicked as America's?

It was not the viciousness of the society that generated terror. Given the crisis atmosphere, the society remained unusually open to other and legitimate and even some illegal (draft-dodging, etc.) forms of protest through the whole period. II was the failure of selfconfidence brought on by the spectacle of the Vietnam War and perhaps also by the dashing of various other sets of expectations that had been raised, and incompletely fulfilled, in the preceding years. The few practitioners of terror, and the larger number of people who preached doctrines of purification by political violence, and the even larger number of their fellow travelers, floated on a carpet of permissiveness that extended far heyoud the privileged precincts from which a good number of the terrorists actually came.

Some of them have reappeared, in defiance or fatigue, over the years, and just the other day a couple of people associated with the 'Weather Underground" were captured by police in connection with a hank robbery and shoot-out in which three lawmen died. AI once it began to he asked whether this white group had links with a black group, whether there might be a Cuban connection, and so on. It will be interesting to get what answers are available. It will be important, however, not to magnify the threat beyond its provable dimensions. At a certain time of Irouhles in the United States, the temptation to respond to political or social frustration with conspiraiorial violence became, for a trivial number of people, irresistible. Some damage was done, some people were killed. But, to its relief. The United States turned out to be one of the countries least hospitable to lendencies of this sort. The few terrorists became not cultural models but rejects, fish without a sea. That is a matter for quiet and thankful noting as a few more of the violent children of the '60s come above ground,

Where Does Reagan Get These Ideas?

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — As long as Ronald Reagan has been in public life, be has been saying things that have made it hard for some people to take him serious-ly. The skepticism, it is clear, has not been an insurmountable barrier to his success; he is, after all, in the White House, and

He bas never been accused of guile. Love him or not, people recognize that Reagan says what he believes. But even with the vast machinery of the government at his service, this president goes right on saying things that make you wonder where in the world be does pick up his ideas

In a meeting with out-of-town reporters and editors on Oct. 16, the president made some rather remarkable assertions.

The Russians, he said, "cannot vastly increase their military productivity because they've already got their people on a starvation diet of sawdust."

The demonstrations against U.S. nuclear weapons that had been popping up in Western European capitals were of no consequence, he said. They resulted from "propaganda that ... can be traced back to the Soviet Union," but the protests were insignificant because none of the Eu-ropean governments was "falling back or falling away from the installation of these weapons

At home, he said, the anti-inflation program "is going to be successful." He went on to say that "our Nobel Prize winner. Milton Friedman, has just been quoted as saying [inflation] will be down to 6 percent next year."

Well, Friedman is a respectable authori-ty, but a few days after the president cited his wisdom, the Consumer Price Index jumped hack up to an annual rate of about 14 percent - recalling, to some people, that the last government that bad embraced Friedman as an authority was that of the embattled British Tory prime minister, Margaret Thatcher.

The president did not name his source on the Soviets' sawdust diet. As for the contention that the antinuclear-weapon demonstrations in Eu-rope are insignificant, events have not been kind to that judgment. Two days after he met with the correspondents, the people of Greece — who are mured to Communist propaganda — elected a new government pledged to the immediate ex-pulsion of American nuclear weapons and eventual withdrawal from the NATO mili-

on considering an offer to the Russians; to freeze any fresh nuclear arms deployment in Western Enrope if the Soviets would reduce their own nuclear missile fleet. Last weekend there were large antinuclear demonstrations in London and Rome that confirmed the warnings of the earlier demonstrations in Berlin, Brussels,

Occasionally, it appears, President Reagan hears something from one of his unnamed authoriues that causes him to revise his opinion. "I had always believed ... the Voting Rights Act should have hear nationwide rather than thisse have been nationwide, rather than taking out certain areas" for its targets, Reagan told his visitors, neglecting to mention that the act was applied only to areas with clear historic records of voting discrimina-tion. "But then, I must say, it was brought to my attention recently that ... it would make it so cumbersome — and I hadn't thought about this — that it might be im-possible to enforce. So we dropped that position. Before rejoicing at this triumph of pedagogy, note that in the very next sentence the president said that the Voting Rights Act extension, recently passed by the House of Representatives, is "maybe ... pretty extreme." He boped, be said, that the Senate would pass a "more reason." able" bill.

That "pretty extreme" bill was passed 389-24, without a murmur of protest from the administration of the administration of the administration of the master port of many of the most conservative members of both parties, who failed to find anything "extreme" about continuing a law which bas enfranchised literally millions of people.

But Reagan's comments suggest that some anonymous authority has again put an idea in his head that could become the Presidential misconceptions are danger-ous playthings. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has tried to nudge the Saudis toward a more flexible PLO stance on settlement with Israel, hut Haig comes on as the partisan of an Arab-Israeli "strategic consensus" that baffles the Saudis. Thus there is a danger that the Egyptian-Israeli peace process will run its course and unravel.

will run its course and unravel.

In Europe, a rage for change akin to that which surged in the United States at the end of the 1960s is at work. The security component of the turmoil is doubt about the 1979 decision to modernize NATO forces. Haig has pushed for more nuclear weapons in Europe while agreeing to talk with the Russians starting next month. But Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger keeps emphasizing, in blustery tones, the nuclear buildup. He thus verifies Europeans' fears of U.S. bellicosity, and whether the properties for a deal with Russia. There is a possibility that the Europeans of the control of Russia. There is a possibility that the Europeans will abandon plans for nuclear deployment, thus putting themselves at the mercy of Russia and allowing the Atlande alliance to fade away.

Presidents normally synchronize top of-ficials at State and Defense who work at cross-purposes. But Ronald Reagan bas no experience in foreign or defense policy, and he seems to work less from docu-ments than from briefings by close advisments than from briefings by close advis-ers. The three elosest advisers who, in effect, translate for him on policy matters — Edwin Meese, James Baker and Micbael Deaver — concentrate heavily on domestic affairs. Richard Allen, the national security adviser, is experienced in foreign policy, but is kept at a distance from the president by the three top aides.

Even if he had better access, it is not clear that be has the analytic power to command serious attention. He bas not been a weighty figure anywhere in Washington, and has had difficulty holding top staff members.

One of the rumors of change sees musical chairs; Meese for Defense in place of Weinberger, who takes Haig's place at State, with Haig's deputy — William Clark, a former Reagan aide in California — moving to the White House in place of Meese and Allen. That shift would put. Reagan intimates at the chief foreign poli-cy posts, but the exit of Haig and Allen would be a net loss of competence.

A more sensible move would be to start by replacing Allen. Good people are avail-able, notably Gen. Brent Skowcroft, who served as national security adviser to President Ford. But neither Skowcroft nor anybody else of caliber will take the post without easy and regular access to the president, which is another way of saying that foreign policy perils can be averted only if the president himself begins to work at it — and work bard. $\infty$1981, Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

About an Unwanted Documentary

NEW YORK — A few years ago a team of young producers in Canada released a series on the use by the CIA of foreign installations for the purpose of doing the CIA's business. The response was sensational.

Norfolk Communications, in due course joined by Kitson Vincent, another enterprising Canadi-an, then decided to attempt a doc-umentary on the machinations of the KGB concerning which they knew liule, and were surprised at the almost nonchalant attention devoted to that agency in one or another government document.

What emerged is the most powerful two-hour documentary on the subject of underground Soviet ac-tivity ever put together. It was shown in Canada and received sensational toutees. The Detriot News bringing in the Canadian signal, called it "powerful," depict-ing the "real world of Soviet espionage in this continent." Vari-ely called it a "riveting documen-tary," and "carefully researched and intriguing."

U.S. Cocaine Sales Top Cannabis; Experts Worried by Drug's 'Harmless' Image

By Thomas O'Toole Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - So rapidly has cocaine become the "drug of choice" among Americans that last year it surpassed marijuana for the first time as the largest producer of illicit income in the United States —and by a huge margin. .

The growth in cocaine use in the last three or four years is so dramatic that street sales of the drug may have reached $35 billion last vear, outselling marijuana or cannabis by $11 billion, according to Drug Enforcement Administration estimates. "There has been an explosive increase in the use of cocaine by Americans in the last few years, says Dr. William Pollin, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse. "Even though cocaine is not physiologically addicting. I find this a very dangerous increase because we're talking about a drug that may be the most seductive, intense and threatening drug we

So far this year, the Drug Enforcement Administration sees no reason cocaine street sales will not set another record.

Grave Dangers

We estimate that as much as 50 metric tons of cocaine were brought illegally into the U.S. last year." DEA spokesman David Hoover said. "We think it's running a little more this year."

In addition to the implications for crime, cocaine appears to be deceptively harmless. In fact, it can be almost as dangerous as heroin, according to drug experts, and can cause paranois, hallucination and manic-depressive reac-

While most doctors who deal with dangerous drugs refrain from describing cocaine use in the country today as an epidemic, many compare it with the turn-of-thecentury "cocaine epidemic" in Europe. Then cocsine use was rampant in the professional classes.

"We're in the formative stage where we're still not dealing with large segments of the population," said Dr. Everett Ellinwood, a Duke University School of Medicine psychiatrist and pharmacologist who is an expert on drug abuse. "Once the epidemic hit at the turn of the century, it marched right down through the popula-

What worries pharmacologists like Dr. Ellinwood is that many users consider cocaine a drug whose "rush" or "high" rewards the body instead of punishing it. Users point out that cocaine does not put them to sleep, keep them awake, leave them with a hangover or addict them to the drug. It does not smell, cause speech to suffer or trigger a change in walk or performance.

"A lot of people lonk at cocaine and think that the use of it has no consequences, you don't have to pay the devil his due," Dr. Ellinwood said.

What concerns Dr. Ellinwood most is that cocaine users are convinced the drug is harmless. "You can develop paranoia, deep-seated suspicion and then go into halluci-nations, delusions of grandeur and manic depression." Dr. Ellinwood said. "A strong enough dose can make you psychotic and an overdose can kill you.

Statistics back this up. Last year, hospital emergency rooms took in more than 4,000 persons suffering from cocaine overdose. Also in 1980, medical examiners in the nation's major cities reported were smugglers who tried to bring the drug into the United States in ballonns they had swallowed. The powdered acid used to preserve the cocaine ate through the balloons and exploded the drug in their stomachs, causing almost instant

Conventional users of cocaine "snort" it through the nose but more and more users are injecting it into their veins, smoking it in its pure powder form in what is called freebase," using it with other drugs like heroin and giving themselves cocaine enemas to heighten the "high" they get from cocaine.

Like a stiff dose of adrenalin, cocaine puts the body into the equivalent of a state of emergency. How it does that is something of a medical puzzle but doctors think it activates neurotransmitters in the brain that release large amounts of a brain chemical called dopamine,

At least 10 cocaine fatalities* which exerts a strong stimulus on the body's motor system.

> "Coc 'ne acts on the brain for no longer than an hour but is very intense while it's working," Dr. Ellinwood says. "You also get a very quick reinforcing effect with a second dose of cocaine that you don't with other stimulants like edrine."

Reinforcing Effect

Dr. Ellinwood said the recent outbreak of cocaine use is a little like the surge of amphetamine use in the 1960s but also a little different. "A lot of people began using amphetamines out of some business ethie, to work hard and keep moving, to stay awake while others were relaxing, eating or sleeping. Coke, on the other hand is a status drug, It's not to work harder. It's almost an exotic way of showing

Labor Asks Inquiry Into Use Of Bingo in British Papers

By William Tuohy Los Angeles Times Service LONDON - The British government has been asked to step in and call a cease-fire to the newspapers "Great Bingo War."

John Fraser, the opposition La-bor Party's spokesman on consumer affairs, said he would ask the director general of fair trade to investigate whether bingo is a "fair or desirable practice" in newspapers and if "selling goods by games of chance ought to bebanned on the grounds that it is not in the consumer's interest."

"The newspaper industry," Mr. Fraser said, "is in such a serious state that ... papers ought to compete on news gathering and good journalism and not on a craze [for bingo] which is beginning to take up news space." The Associated Press
KAMPALA, Uganda — Britishborn Robert Astles, once a top aide to deposed dictator Idi Amin,

Mr. Fraser's remarks came as the tabloid Daily Express decided to get into the bingo war, and the Daily Mail was considering competing with a roulette-type game.

In Britain, bingo parlors are widespread. They provide a popular form of afternoon and evening recreation. Over the years, many regional papers have run bingo games as circulation-builders, but the practice did not come to Fleet Street, home of the British national press, until this summer.

First at Daily Star

It hit first at the Daily Star, a tabloid owned by the Express Group and noted chiefly for pub-lishing pictures of unclad women.

At the time, the Star's circulation was 1.1 million daily. Most analysts said the Star would need about 2 million in order to make a profit. Within weeks, the Star's cir-

Generally, the procedure is for the newspapers to deluge a target area with bingo cards — either by direct mail or by hand deliveries. Large supplies of cards are also provided to local news vendors.

The cards have boxes, with num-bers, and each card has a different set of the numbers. Objections Raised

Every day the papers run several numbers, and when these numbers match those on a person's card, the card holder is eligible for a prize.

Objections to the scheme have been raised by the British Bingo Association, which fears that fewer people will visit their halls if they can play at home.

There are drawbacks to the bingo craze, according to some publishing analysts. It is costly to distribute the cards and pay the prize money. In some cases, costs could exceed the revenue from added cir-

Normally, a political party that had won its first victory, and a smashing one at that, could be expected to be inflated and exuberant. At their first national congress since taking both the presidency and the National Assembly in the spring. France's Socialists have been complaining of a sense of aimlessness, of lack of purpose. Binge-and-Purge Eating — the Roman Orgy, American Style

By Jane E. Brody

NEW YORK — The Roman orgy, a pro-longed feast interspersed with periodic purgiog to make continued gorging possible, was an occasional event among the wealthy in ancient Rome. But today this binge and purge behavior has become a daily affair for growing oumbers of young American women, threatening their health and interfering with their lives.

For some, the syndrome, known as hulimia (from the Greek, meaning "ox hunger"), has evolved into a $50-to-$100-a-day food habit that has forced them into bankruptcy, stealing and even prostitution. Victims may consume up to 55,000 calories in an hour or two, then induce vomiting and repeat the behavior as often as four times a day. Others take laxatives — as many as 300 a week — to prevent their bodies from retaining the enormous amounts of food they consume

Psychotherapists at clinics for eating disor-ders around the United States say the secretive phenomenon, which oearly always starts with a stringent diet to lose weight, is oow epidemic on college campuses. A single oewspaper arti-cle on bulimia in Los Angeles brought 50 calls from desperate victims. A news service article emanating from the Eating Disorders Clinic at Massachusetts General Hospital recently hrought 50 referrals in one day. And a program on bulimia broadcast on British television drew 10,000 letters from persons who wanted help.

10 Seattle, nearly 4 percent of students who visited the University of Washington Psychia-tric Clinic sought help for bulimia. Therapists there, who referred to the 4 percent as a "strik-ing frequency," said they believed this oumber represented the tip of the bulimia iceberg.

Binge eating is apparently extremely common, experts report. And some binge-enters discover they can avoid the caloric consequences of their behavior by purges. Various studies iodicate that 15 to 20 percent of college women occasionally purge after hinges, but for some it becomes habitual behavior.

A survey of 500 bulimics who, in response to publicity, contacted the Anorexia Nervosa Project at the Psychosomatic and Psychiatric Institute of Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago, showed that victims wait an average of 51/2 years before seeking help. Many had thought they were the only ones with this problem and were ton ashamed to reveal it to their physi-

Yet, according to Dr. Craig Johnson, direc-tor of the project and editor of the new International Journal of Eating Disorders, early detection and intervention is important to suc-cessful treatment of bulimia. "The longer it goes on the more entrenched the behavior and the harder it is to intercept," he said in an

Other researchers report that bulimics are typically upwardly mobile, achievement-ori-ented perfectionists who, despite their accomolishments, have little self-esteem and measure their worth through the eyes of others. They also commonly fear intimacy with others and have conflicts between aggressive tendencies and their submissive role as women.

Dr. Anita Siegman of the University of Southern California sees the eating disorder in part as growing out of the stress of trying to be perfect. "Eating becomes a form of release, the only thing they can completely control." she removed "Enot temporarily religious the analysis. remarked. "Food temporarily relieves the anger and depression most of these women feel."

In its most severe form, the syndrome pre-cludes a cormal social and working life. "So many hours are spent eating and vomiting that nearly all social contact is cut off," Dr. Pyle said. "Many patients said all they did was work, sleep and binge."

The disorder can also have potentially serious, and possibly fatal, medical complications. Most commonly, victims develop severe tooth decay from destruction of the tooth en-

Bulimia is related to, but distinct from, another eating disorder, anorexia nervosa, the self-induced "starvation disease," which is also now being seen in increasing oumbers of young people. Whereas most bulimics are at or near a normal weight for their height, anorexics drop 25 percent or more below oormal weight. About half of anorexics periodically experience binge and purge behavior, and this group is considered bardest to treat. Bulimics and anorexics share a morbid fear of weight gain and a fear of losing control over their

Going oo binges without purging is often found among obese people. However, according to Dr. Susan Wooley of the department of psychiatry at the University of Cincinnati Medical Center, the obese tend to consume far less food in a binge than do hulimia patients.

Whereas an obese persoo might count a half a pizza and two brownies as a binge, a typical binge for a bulimic may begin with two pack-ages of cookies and a loaf of bread, a galloo of milk and a half galloo of ice cream and con-

Experts disagree on how to characterize bulimia. While most view it as a form of sub-stance abuse, akin to drug addiction and alcoholism, others say it is an obsessive-compul-

Dr. Johnson, who considers bulimia an addiction, said bulimics use food to regulate tensions, "They latch onto food, instead of alcosive disorder like compulsive hand-washing.

"The author [Judy Mazel] accidentally struck upon a system that mimics bulimis by hol or drugs, because they are basically a bunch of good girls, not lawbreakers, and food has no apparent moral, legal or medical consequences," he said.

Cultural factors that place a premium on slimness also play a role, the experts believe. In some people, the effort to be thin results in a state of chronic self-induced starvation. As Dr. Wooley put it, "One hundred percent of the people want to be in the bottom 10 percent of a bell-shaped curve of normal weight distribution. This is especially true for women, many of whom try to maintain a weight that is below their oormal set point."

She cited studies of starvation showing that people of cormal weight who lose a significant amount of weight start going on binges as soon as they are given access to unlimited quantities of food. This phenomenon may explain why bulimia commonly starts at the conclusion of a diet. Dr. Wooley believes that binges get worse with time because the repeated purges impair the body's ability to detect satiation; this results in a need for ever-greater quantities of food to appease "hunger."

Dr. Johnsoo said his survey revealed that

"the binging per se is oot a gratifying experi-ence" but rather is associated with feelings of disgust, helplessness, guilt and panic. The purge, on the other hand, is a source of relief

r most victims. Based on such observations and on their belief that bulimia is a compulsion. Drs. James Rosen and Harold Leitenberg, psychologists at the University of Vermont, begin treatment by preventing the purges.

"The driving force of the disorder is the vomiting, not the binging." Dr. Rosen said.
"Some bulimics report that they binge only to make it easier to vomit. Once someone has learned that vomiting reduces anxiety, rational fears no longer inhibit overeating."

Thus, he starts by showing victims they can live through the anxiety provoked by eating. As fear diminishes, more cormal eating habits evolve, the Vermont researchers said in a report that will soon be published. They say they have completely stopped the binge and purge syndrome in a dozen patients treated thus far, with minimal weight gain afterward, but further studies are needed to determine the treatment's long-term value.

Dr. Pyle of the University of Minnesota Hospitals believes the key to treatment lies in learning to cat three meals a day, planning ahead so as to reduce anxiety about food. This is coupled with a program of exercise and relaxation, behavior modification techniques and psychotherapy.

At Massachusetts General Hospital, Dr. David B. Herzog and his colleagues take an interdisciplinary approach to treatment, including psychotherapy, outrition, social work and dentistry. Dr. Herzog, among others, has found that group therapy is helpful to many bulimics, who generally feel isolated and alienated.

Long Dispute Expected On Merits of Private vs. Public Third World Aid

By Iain Guest

New York Times Service GENEVA — Last week, on the eve of the North-South summit meeting at Cancún, Mexico, the Geneva-based International Labor Organizatioo released a study showing that $76 billion worth of foreign investment in the Third World had led to the direct formation of only 4 million jobs — 0.5 percent of the total work force.

The study was in stark contrast to an earlier estimate by the agency that I billioo jobs need to be created in developing countries by the end of the century. It has also served to east doubts on the view of the Reagan administration that the private sector holds the key to

Third World development.
That view, put forward by President Reagan at the loternational Monetary Fund meeting in Washington and at Cancún, is emerging as a central plank of U.S. strategy for the Third

This has left officials in Geneva perplexed, as it comes after years of growing consensus among UN agencies that unfettered free enterprise is a recipe for urban slums and indif-ference to the rural sector, where most of the Third World's 800 million poor live.

The consensus is now seen as challenged by a U.S. administration that is prepared to project its economic philosophies onto the Third World, to demand cutbacks to the government sector, to reduce aid and to trim the role of international agencies in which it has a decisive say.

"To say we're worried is an understatement," said one official. He predicted o prolonged period of dispute ahead that will over-shadow the agreement at Cancun to conduct North-South oegotiations within the United

The first bone of cootention is: What is the root cause of Third World poverty? Reflecting their own efforts to curb public spending, Mr. Reagan and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher appear to view the cause as excessive, incllicient government. UN officials in Geneva, in contrast, cite a series of external blows over which the developing countries have had

From this stems a disagreement over the role of the IMF, whose job as world economic policeman was again defended by Mr. Reagan at Cancun. It is partly a question of the relatively small amount loaned by the IMF to the non-OPEC developing countries — roughly $9 billion last year against deficits of $82 billion — and partly the deflationary conditions that come with IMF loans.

Critics complain that these conditions have a depressant effect in countries that lack the West's "social safety net" of welfare and oldage pensions. They also ask what is the point of such conditions if the economic crisis is ontside a government's control.

One foretaste of the debate to come was of-fered recently when the World Bank released a report on sub-Saharan Africa, prepared by U.S. economist Elliot Berg.

At first reading, the report — which was redrafted after protests by African governments — confirms many of Mr. Reagan's points. It criticizes inefficient and "bloated" bodies such as commodity marketing boards, and points with concern to the growth of public expenditure (in Mauritania, for example, this has reached 18 percent of the gross domestic product. In Kenya, the figure is 17 percent.)

Not Less, but Better Yet one analyst in Geneva viewed the Berg report as a call not for less, but for better, government. He poioted out that the report, as well as calling for a doubling of aid to sub-Saharan Africa, stresses the lack of trained manpower, which the analyst called "possibly the single greatest bottleneck to development

For this official, as for others, two important questions arise from the Berg report and the controversy it has generated: First, whether governments of least developed countries should be prepared to give up responsibility for such key operations as cocoa and coffee-marketing boards and social programs for health, education and employment; and sec-ond, if they did, whether the private sector could be persuaded to take their place.

Many analysts in Geneva say that the answer to both is no, because the private sector sees less and less attraction in the diminishing purchasing power and falling living standards of the poorest countries.

This conclusion, which challenges Mr. Reagan's contentions, appears to be borne out by recent work of UN bodies in Geneva.

The discrepancies in wealth between rich and poor countries is especially apparent statistically in relative energy costs.

lo Africa, infant mortality claims one in 10 children born. In some countries of sub-Saharan Africa, only I percent of the rural population has access to fresh water,

Opportunity for Industry

Officials at the Geneva-based World Health Organization have long argued that such statis-tics — however appalling — represent a major opportunity for private industry. For example, urgent efforts are under way to develop new anti-malarial drugs following signs that the parasite that causes the disease has developed resistance to drugs in a broad stretch of Asia and Latin America. But only one new drug, called melloquin, being tested by the Swiss company F. Hoff-man-La Roche & Co., is expected to come onto the market in the oear future. WHO officials are alarmed that the number of large companies actively researching aoti-malarials has fallen in about the last three years from 15

Part of the reason, they concede, is the role of WHO itself. In an effort to cut Third World import bills, for instance, WHO has urged Third World governments to limit the range of drugs they buy to 200 essentials, and has of-fered to act as intermediary in bulk buying, further reducing the incentive for industry.

Io addition, however, there is the huge cost of developing a new drug — put at more than $15 million in the case of melioquin. Despite the involvement of Hoffman-La Roche, most of the expensive research on the drug was conducted at the Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington.

But WHO officials feel that the main reason for the companies' reluctance is the poverty of the governments that most need the drugs.

They prefer to develop drugs against rheu-matism and arthritis for use in affluent countries where they can make a profit," said Walther Wernsdorfer, an official in the WHO

Greater Commitment

While industry clearly has a role, say WHO officials, it cannot substitute for a greater com-mitment to health programs by governments, help from multilateral agencies, and major for-eign aid — all of which are viewed with suspicion by Mr. Reagan. lo 1977, developing countries spent $75 billion on health, of which only $400 million came from aid.

The ILO report that foreign companies have directly created only 4 million jobs in the Third World also points out that investment has missed both the poorest countries and the neediest sectors.

Of the $76 billion of direct investment in the Third World at the end of 1976, $41 billion was invested in 10 of the most advanced countries, with Brazil accounting for $10.7 billion. Despite its needs, Africa's share was only 14 percent — a decline from 19.4 percent at the end of 1970.

Barriers Need Lifting

According a related ILO survey of 250 companies, 87 percent of the jobs created were in-manufacturing, and only 1 percent in agricullLO officials have long argued that instead of depending on foreign investment, govern-ments should implement land reforms and programs aimed at meeting the basic needs of the very poor. This in turn, they say, would create a better climate for Western investment.

The first bone of contention is: What is the root cause of Third World poverty? Excessive, inefficient government, or a series of externalblows over which developing countries have had no control?

Yet ILO officials also agree with Mr. Reagan that barriers to the Third World's most competitive products must be lifted. They have thus watched with alarm as the United States and the European Economic Community have fought for tougher curbs on textile imports once the current quota-setting multifiber arrangement expires at the end of

At the end of 1980, Third World debts stood at $456 billion. Of this, roughly $300 billion has been loaned by private banks — and nowhere else in its involvement with develop-ing countries is the private sector quite so exopment. Nonetheless, he said, the limit has almost certainly been reached, and he warned of "catastrophe" if a major debtor such as Brazil, which owes $45 billion to banks, were to default. At the end of 1980, 26 developing com-

out that as the private banks have taken on a larger share of loans to the Third World, the poorest countries have received proportionally less, because they are out considered creditworthy. The effect of this has been to increase the need for official government aid.

The conference's recipe is for sweeping structural reforms under the banner of a "new international economic order," and this has brought it into sharper conflict with the United States than any other UN agency.

Still, a growing number of UN officials agree that some kind of across-the-board changes involving debt relief commodity expensive stranges involving debt relief. changes involving debt relief, commodity sta-bilization and a substantial transfer of resources (assuming this could be achieved without fueling inflation) may be the only salvation for an increasing oumber of countries.

SPAIN is vigorously courting foreign invest-ment and the obvious attractions have brought in a flood of foreign interests that of-ten appear to have more faith in the country's future than the Spaniards themselves.

Apart from generous tax and credit incentives, Spain's future entry into the European Economic Community is a potent lure. With unemployment running at 13 percent of the work force, labor-intensive ventures are particularly welcome, and the trade unions have moted some of the militancy that marked the first years of the transition to democracy. Direct foreign investment last year-totaled $1.2

The February coup attempt does not appear to have shaken confidence and there is a general feeling in the business community that finally the government is taking necessary steps to sort out the economy. One influential for-eign banker in Madrid said, "I'm very optimis-tic about Spain's future in terms of foreign investment. If I had the choice of investing in France or Spain, coup or no coup, I know damn well I would rather risk it here than in

Liberalization

As part of a liberalization program, only investments of more than $5 million now need to have cabinet approval. Attempts are being made to reduce the red tape involved in investing in one of the industrial expansion areas where free or cheap land is available. Priority is given in obtaining offical loans and some taxes are reduced by up to 95 percent for five years. Profits and dividends can be freely re-patriated and export credits are available on favorable terms.

Leading the way in Spanish investment is the United States (42 percent of new investment in 1979 and 25 percent last year), followed by Switzerland, France, West Germany and the Netherlands. Arab oil money has also been arriving, chiefly to buy real estate and been arriving chiefly to buy real estate and interests in tourism ventures. Chemicals, financial institutions and the hotel business continue to attract foreign money, but the big-gest sector by far is the automobile industry.

Foreign Interests

Ford led the way in the early 1970s by investing an initial $600 million to establish a factory near Valencia to produce its Fiesta. From the start it was a success story and last year Ford Espana turned an $8.4-million profit, "By any terms of measurement, the Spanish project is one of the best investments Ford has ever made," said Carl F. Levy, founder of the Valencia factory. After 27 years with Ford, he left to become managing director of a new American project with International Harvest-

· International Harvester has acquired 35 percent, with an option to take a further 30 per-cent, of the state-owned Enasa (Empresa Nacional de Autocamiones), which produces trucks, buses and vans. With Mr. Levy at the helm, International Harvester is injecting $500 million and its technology into Enasa. A new company, known as Enasa Internacional, with a majority IH interest, has just bought a site outside Madrid for a factory to produce 80,000 four-cylinder niesel engines annually by 1985. Eighty percent to 85 percent of the engines will be exported. IH designs will also be used for a new line of Enasa farm and vine-

One Madrid-based business expert said, "Everything is not cast in concrete here. It may be the last oportunity to get into the EEC environment writing your own rules."

General Motors clearly understood that, when it extracted generous terms from Spain in return for investing more than $2 billion in the biggest single foreign investment project

More than 12,000 jobs will be created by the company's factories under construction in Saragossa province, near Cadiz, and at Logrono. Production is due to start in September, 1982, of a new economy car intended chiefly for export. Annual output is planned to reach 270,000 vehicles. The project benefits from cheap land and official credits and subsidies, demonstrating government eagemess to en-courage development in particular areas.

Japanese Present

The Japanese are also establishing a tochold in Spain. Yamaha caused some alarm to domestic motorcycle manufacturers with its move to take over two companies. Nissan, with a 36 percent interest acquired from Massey Ferguson, is introducing its technology into Barcelona-based Motor Iberica. The company is gearing up to turn out a Japanese-deexport markets. Meanwhile, the financially troubled Seat automobile company is seeking a partnership with Toyota to replace Fiat, which abruptly backed out of a take-over deal last year. Seat desperately needs multinational links to attain viability.

Preparing for EEC entry, Dow Chemical is Preparing for EEC entry, Dow Chemical is investing heavily in expanding its Tarragona installations. Recently it agreed to pay Enpetrol, the state petrochemical giant, $150 million for an ethylene plant instead of building its own plant as previously planned. Spain is looking for the latest technology, and food processing, electronics and consumer goods appear to offer bright opportunities. The country's drive to become less dependent on oil imports opens up new vistas. In Bilbao, work is proceeding on a super port intended to be a major transshipment point for coal and other materials. Elf Aquitaine is one of the foreign interests already participating.

It is noteworthy that a good part of the revival of the Madrid stock market has been due to foreign investors' buying up shares in banking, electricity companies, chemicals and other

A SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT

Opening the Gates

By Mark J. Kurlansky

TAKE A MAP of Europe including everything from the Ural Mountains to the Atlantic and color in all the countries belonging to the three important trade groups — EFTA (European Free Trade Association), the Common Market and the Soviet block's COMECON — and there are only two countries left in isolation: Albania and Spain.

"For centuries we have been isolated from what is our real space," said the Spanish Secretary of State for Common Market relations, Raimundo Bassols. The late Generalissimo Francisco Franco and the Falangist philosophy from which he derived much of his style espoused a distrust of everything foreign. For 36 years he isolated the country as much as possible. After his death in 1975, Spain began to reawaken to a modern postwar world, and began to deal with four decades of postponed decisions.

Some of these, such as NATO entry, are cootroversial and the natioo has been thrust into a dizzying storm of major economic, defense and foreign policy debates. But on the broader issue, to abandon isolation, there is a strong consensus.

"The tragedy of Spain," said a well-established Spanish paioter, "is that Franco didn't die a little earlier." This sentiment is often heard from laymen and politicians. Franco spent his last years riding out a period of great economic growth. At about the time of his death, the recessioo that had hit the rest of the world two years earlier swept into the Spanish economy.

Economic Growth Rate

Io the last decade of Franco's rule the economie growth rate averaged seven percent, Inflation is also running high but the greatest problem in social terms has been unemployment. There are more than 1.6 million unemployed Spaniards, a figure that has doubled since 1977.

These problems oot only make it difficult for Spain to open into Europe but give ammunition to retrogressive elements under the increasingly familiar slogan "We lived better under Franco."

"The Spanish people are a people tightly bound to democratie liberty who did oot live well with fascism," said Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez. This is the image that most Spanish leaders want to give the world. The attempted coup of etaat in which the military held the legislature at gunpoint in front of the televisioo cameras was seen as a humiliation and an insult to what they have been trying to build. The Madrid daily El Pais characterized the attempt in an editorial the have been trying to build. The Madrid daily El Pais characterized the attempt in an editorial the following morning as "a humiliation for the dignity and maturity of one of the oldest nations in the Western world."

After the coup attempt, Spain underwent a cervous period in which the Socialist opposition worked closely with the ruling UCD (Union of the Democratic Center) and compromise accords were drawn up on certain issues, such as the economy and regional autonomy.

This fall has begun with a greater sense of confidence, Mr. Gonzales, who was warning of further dangers last spring, said, "There is no reason internally or internationally to think that a coup d'etat attempt could succeed."

European Democracy

Spain is back to taking on the cootroversial question as to what kind of European democracy to become. Under the pressure of issues such as a scandal over poisonous olive oil that has killed 165 people, public education, private television, NATO entry, the decentralization of the government and the worsening ecocomic picture, the political parties that were formed in haste after the death of Franco are shifting, fraying and splitting.

The Socialists are moving closer to the center. The UCD, a party that Antonio Garrigues (a multinational lawyer who refused a post in the government to develop his own "liberal" movement) describes as "trying to have the three main ideologies of Europe live together in one party," is dividing into at least three identifiable factions.

This fall Spain is, in the words of Mr. Garrigues, "getting down to real politics."

It may be that the post-Franco period is ending and a new period beginning. There is still an air of excitement and change. Banks and major industries are reorganizing, social institutions are being re-evaluated, the arts are being internationalized and, after centuries, Spain has the fresh, youthful feel of a new country.

Debate Over NATO Membership Heating Up

ONE of the primary preoccupations of the Spanish government this fall has been entry into NATO, a move that is not only unentry into NATO, a move that is not only unpopular but, according to a recent poil for the Madrid daily newspaper El Pais, is considered a priority issue by only 3 percent of the population. Nevertheless, large demonstrations have been held and the signatures of hundreds of thousands collected to oppose NATO entry.
Former Premier Adolfo Suarez backed off from the NATO issue while in power, feeling that other related points, such as the status of Gibraltar, occded to be straightened out first. But when Leopoldo Calvo Sotello came to power he immediately began moving toward NATO entry.

"As a medium [power] country we share the common dangers of Western countries," said Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorea in a private interview shortly after rejecting a Sovi-et memorandum cautioning Spain against the NATO move. Mr. Perez-Llorca emphasized that Spain in-er centile tended to be "a strong supporter of detente in NATO. We do not want our decision to be misunderstood and considered hawkish." In fact, the government is insisting that no nuclear weapons be placed on Spanish soil.

Io 1979, the Spanish had the United States withdraw its ouclear weapons from the Rota submarine base.) They are also insisting that the Spanish command all forces on Spanish territory and in territorial waters.

A major reason for seeking entry is simply to build more ties to the Western world. The advocates for entry see it as a step in Europeanizing and modernizing the country. In pilitary circles it is seen as a chance to modernize the Spanish armed forces. There is also a widely questioned argument that NATO entry would Westernize the conspiracy-prone rightist military. "Modernization of the mind" was the phrase used by one top government

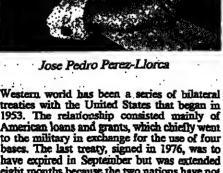

Uotil now, the main military tie with the treaties with the United States that began in 1953. The relationship consisted mainly of American loans and grants, which chiefly went to the military in exchange for the use of four yet agreed on a new accord.

To many Spaniards, the relationship with the United States is a symbol of the Pranco era. American ties with the late Generalissimo segment of the population. "We were trauma-tized by the American approval of the dicta-torship of Franco," said Socialist leader Felipe Those Spaniards who still favor a bilateral accord feel that the United States should offer more in both civilian and military cooperation than was offered to the late dictator. "As is natural, the less-strong country in a bilateral negotiation of this nature should make sure that it is getting what it needs," said Robles Piquer, who was heading the Spanish side of negotiations.

National Referendum

New negotiations will not begin until after the NATO issue is resolved. "Entry into NATO will greatly facilitate obtaining our goals on the bilateral treaty," said Mr. Perez-Llorca. Some advocates of NATO entry even suggest that it will make a bilateral relation-ship with the United States unnecessary.

The Socialists (PSOE) and Communists (PCE) vehemently oppose the Spanish entry into NATO. Even in the ranks of the ruling UCD (Union of the Democratic Center) there is uncertainty. The government, pointing to one article in the Spanish Constitution, wanted to decide by a simple majority in the legislature. The left, pointing to a different article in the Constitution wanted a national reference. dum. The government, with enough legislative votes behind them, refused the referendum.

There is good reason to think that a national referendum would be easily won by the anti-entry side. The most recent poll, taken this month by Sofemasa for the respected Socialist leaning El Pais, showed 52 percent opposed to entry and 18.1 percent in favor. The referendum approach was favored by 69 per-

Spain has been neutral since 1939 and has relatively open relations with the Soviet Un-ion. It also has close ties with the Arab world (Spain does not recognize the state of Israel).
Opponents fear that NATO entry would jeopardize Spain's unique position. Felipe Gonzalez insists that he does not oppose NATO but only Spanish entry at this time. He points out that NATO would not defend Spanish interests in the North African enclaves of Centa and Melilla and would oblige Spain to defend the popularly resented (in Spain) British soverreignty of Gibraltar.

The government acknowledges that there is strong public opposition to the NATO plan, but insists that it is "too complex" an issue for a referendum. They are anxious to get NATO entry passed this fall and proceed with the po-litical rehabilitation of the UCD which has become particularly urgent since their defeat in the recent Galician autonomy elections.

Delaying Tactics

Socialist delaying tactics have already caused them to miss their first goal, which was the Oct. 27 reopening of the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. The next target is Nov. 26, when Common Market discussions on Spanish entry will take place in London. It is hoped that NATO entry might have a positive effect on those talks. Premier Calvo Sotello will also go to London

Opposition Leader: A Man on the Move

NATO entry, rising unemploy-ment, a scandal over toxic olive oil that has killed 165 people - divides and subdivides the ruling UCD (Union of the Democratic Center) party, it is being thought more and more likely that the 39-year-old leader of the opposition, Felipe Gonzalez of the PSOE (Spanish Socialist Workers Party) could be president of the Spanish government by 1983.

Casually but well-dressed, scated in his modest and comfortable office on the top floor of the closely guarded party headquarters in the Rios Rosas section of Madrid, he puffs on an exquisite, hand rolled, eight-inch Havana cigar that he said was sent to him by Fidel Castro. He speaks articulately and with confidence, but with an underlying intensity that he can use to mesmerize crowds. In the world of politics he could be called

I am they say, relatively some factors." tively young for a politician. I had not thought about a governmental role in my life. I was in a struggle against a dictator for 20 years and after the dictator, I have tried to fight to consolidate a democratic regime."

He feels that the United States has sometimes had a negative influence in that consolidation process, such as U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's failure to condemn the attempted military coup d'etat on Feb. 23 in which Mr. Gonzalez and the rest of the Spanish legislature were held at gunpoint. Mr. Gonzalez protests what he sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as the American "image of Spain are not made and in the sees as cess, such as U.S. Secretary of age of Spain as an underdeveloped country on the one hand and a country without a [democratic] tradition and on the other hand with a very negative tradition more or less like Turkey [where a military coupl was accepted not only by the United States but much of Europe as the lesser evil ... He had always refused to go to the United States, a country he has since childhood resented for entering into a treaty with Generalissimo Francisco Franco in 1953, "Eisenhower reinforced the dictatorship," said Mr. Gonzalez. But his first visit to Washington and New York in 1977 changed his image of America. "Since that moment, I am always of a disposition to go there, to know the society, the am-biance and the politicians of the

" I was struck by that experience — the capacity to express liberty, to breathe, to live in the society even if I have many criticisms." The Spanish opposition leader concedes that it is more difficult for him and his party to maintain good relations with the Reagan administration than it was with the Carter administration. But he is not totally dissatisfied with the Reagan hard line toward Moscow. On Spanish-American relations,

"I am afraid of the increase in international tension. But on a broader reflection I believe, sincerely, that for the Soviet Union to understand, to sit around a table, it is better with the hard-line Republican administration than the Democratic administration."

Mr. Gonzalez speaks of "the logic of superpowers beyond ideo-logical differences" that enables them to understand each other. He said that former President Jimmy Carter "broke from the super-power logic, and he paid."

Mr. Gonzalez, who as vice president of the Socialist International drafted the Socialist stand sup-porting Nicaragua and the gnerri-la movement in El Salvador, is less content with superpower logic in other areas. It is very difficult to understand the United States of the problems of Nicaragua, El Sal-vador and Central America. It is very difficult to understand the Soviet Union vis a vis the problem of

According to him, in Latin American countries, "the best American countries, "the best redistribution of wealth is democratic socialism and in this sense the fundamental barrier against the implantation of communism is always a democratic socialist

Mr. Gonzalez said, "Really, we have had no reason to be satisfied with the United States in the past," and cautions that there is "a very delicate historical change taking place in the youth of Europe."

He said: "The youth of Europe did not see World War II. They did not live through the United States as liberator. They have today's experiences. They are today in a debate that began with the Vietnam war. So today the debate on nuclear arms, Iran, economic independence, is creating a refusal of the United States among the young which I think will be very difficult to repair. I think that the United States is not sensitive to this change of opinion, which forgets the role of liberator, the Marshall Plan, etc."

Mr. Gonzalez, who is leading the fight against Spanish entry into NATO, sees a unique role for Spain in the world. "In East-West relations it is clear that Spain is the West in all senses and historical conditions. In North-South relations it is a country halfway be-tween the North and the South. Not only because of geography but because of development. It is a country that expresses the inequality between the North and South because it is situated geographically and economically in that place."

Air Travel Soars, Roads and Rails Gain

By Mark Williams

ON SUMMER weekends, Palma de Majorca's Sou San Juan Airport is one of Europe's bu-siest, handling more than 500 flights and 60,000 passengers daily. Yet, during the winter, traffic falls dramatically. The highly seasonal nature of some "tourist airports" is just one variable complicating Spanish airport planning. Another is the unusually large number of international airports.

"There are 33 civil airports in Spain with more than 20 receiving international flights," explained Luis Alvarez, Spanish minister of transportation, tourism and communications. "Eleven others, belonging to the military, are also used commercially. Germany, by contrast, has only 12 international airports.

Problems in running so many major airports efficiently have been compounded by the spectacular growth in air traffic over the last two decades, from about 3 million passengers in 1960 to more than 45 million last year. Because of Spain's unusually tough terrain; with Europe's second highest average altitude, Mr. Alvarez said, surface transportation was retarded and the country developed a high dependence on the airplane. Expansion was not always matched by improved services.

Recently the government won approval of a five-year, $820-million program designed to restructure and modernize Spanish airports. Most of the money will be funneled into 10 regional destinations that receive the bulk of traffic. The remaining provincial, municipal or strictly tourist airports will receive less attention.

The plan is designed to improve three basic areas: air traffic control through semi-automation, the general infrastructure with new and better terminals, runways and loading facilities, and airport services like security and passenger control. Things like baggage handling and reservations are affected indirectly," said Mr. Alvarez.

Spanish authorities have already begun several projects, including new terminals at Madrid and Valencia. The new Vitoria Airport serving the Basque region is Spain's most modern. "We are rationalizing the system to improve security, efficiency and economy. By 1985, Spain's sirports will match Western European standards in every Winds of change are also blowing at RENFE. Spain's national railway network. A decade ago, the antiquated train system was a traveler's night-mare. Anyone unwittingly boarding the correct found himself stopping at every village en route.

The rapido and expresso trains, which charged velocity supplements," made a mockery of their rames by finally depositing bone weary passengers at their destinations many hours and even days after departure.

Primitive Spanish rail conditions began to change in 1958 with the first Ten Year Plan and more improvements came during the 1970s. Another giant stride toward a first-class rall network was taken in July with the Plan General de Ferro-carriles for 1982-1984, part of a $3.2-billion project stretching to 1992. RENFE will add tracks, electrify and renovate others, break up traffic bottlenecks and purchase hundreds of modern cars and locomotives.

Spain's rail system suffers from its basic radial design - making trips to and from Madrid relatively easy and others challenging. For example, the express service linking Barcelona and Malaga makes the 1,200-kilometer trip in just under 21 hours. Travel by rail between Catalonia and the Basque region is problematic.

The new plan concentrates on seven major traffic nuclei. By increasing the average train speed to 140-160 kilometers an hour and improving efficiency generally, RENFE plans to cut 30 percent to 40 percent off travel times and double the number of weekly services along heavily traveled

An estimated total of 80 percent of Spain's commercial surface transport moves on the nation's roads, which remain backward by EEC standards. Less than 1.5 percent are superhighways and an ambitious building program has been frozen by the Ministry of Public Works in order to concentrate on repairs to existing roads. The $157 million being spent in 1981 is considered insufficient. Roads are Spain's next big challenge in modernizing its transportation network.

DURING the next five years, Spain is to push through a vital — and inevitably painful — markets began to diminish, wage price index in 1982. Retirement and redundancy will shave 5,800

It will affect 7,500 companies employing more than 600,000 workers, and the cost has been estimated at $5.7 billion. The sectors affected include shipbuilding, steel, textiles, footwear and paper. Considerable controversy surrounds the program, due to be de-bated this fall in the Spanish parliament, but the government insists there is no alternative.

Spanish industry's problems date back to the mid-70s when, preoccupied with the political transition, Madrid paid little attention to the recession due to the oil. crisis. While other European countries were already adjusting to fall-ing demand, some Spanish industries optimistically pushed ahead with expansion projects. Bulk steel was the most notable example. A 1974 plan predicted steel con-sumption of 20 million tons by 1982, but this year's figure is likely to be closer to 8 million.

Deeper Into Debt

Saddled with overblown production capacity, many industries have fallen deeper and deeper into debt. Whatever chances they have of recovery have been crushed by is to have any chance of success. the heavy burden of servicing these. Steelworkers have agreed to debts. Many have lacked the wage increases of 9 percent this bills soared. Looming in the near future is entry to the European Economic Community, where Spanish industry, accustomed to protection against outside competition, will face a severe challenge.

Sector by Sector

Instead of trying to rescue individual firms, the government has decided to tackle the problem sector by sector. The aim is to clean up industry's finances, boost productivity and generally prepare it to meet competition on the open market. The operation will be delicate and some blood is sure to be drawn. Although the Ministry of Industry wants to keep companies afloat if possible and to maintain jobs (13 percent of the work force is already unemployed), rational-ization will take its toll. About 70,000 workers will have to be pensioned off or relocated. Businessmen are concerned that the trade unions will use the rescue program to assume powers, usually prerogative of management, while the unions argue that since large amounts of public funds are involved, they have the right to a say in their use. Worker cooperation is clearly necessary if the plan and redundancy will shave 5,800 from the integrated steel industry's 44,000 employees.

The First Step

The first step in overhauling the big three, Altos Hornos de Vizcaya (27 percent owned by U.S. Steel and the rest by major banks), and state-owned Ensidesa and Altos Hornos del Mesiterraneo, requires recasting their finances. Debts of $1.6 billion are being renegotiated and low-interest credits arranged.

The trade unions surcely oppose the proposal to slash by 5,000 the big shipbuilders' work force of 31,000 and to close some yards. After a colossal boom in the early 1970s, Spanish shipbuilding slumped badly but oow orders are picking up. Trouble in Textiles

Textile manufacturers, employing 420,000, are in trouble because of competition from Third World countries, dated technology, high financial costs and over-fragmentation. A 10 percent cut in the work force, the introduction of an extra shift, and investment in new machinery are among the proposals for this sector. The footwear in-dustry, with 50,000 workers spread over 1,400 companies, is also hammering out a plan that would within three years, according to management. The manufacturers want a $200 million injection of cash to put the sector on a sound

Apart from these changes, the state holding company INI (Insti-tuto Nacional de Industria) is attempting to bring more efficiency and sound management to the companies it controls, involving everything from coal mining to making ball bearings. Often forced to take over lame-duck enterprises, INI is giving more attention these days to energy resources and mod-ern high technology industries.

$225-Million Loss

It controls Spain's national automobile company, Seat, for which it has been trying to find a foreign partner following Fiat's decision last year to give up its interest.

Seat produced 297,000 cars last year, but lost $225 million, partly because of heavy financial burdens. In a new strategic plan, 7,000 employees will be shed from the 32,000 work force and an emphasis will be placed on developing its own technology.

in the ultra-competitive 1980s. Seat needs a multinational partner to guarantee large-scale production and international outlets. The likely candidate is Toyota.

International Currents Attract Spanish Artists

IN SPANISH painting, as in American, there was a phenomenon called the generation of the '50s — artists who reached maturity and created their own thriving school of art during that decade. As in New York, they were abstractionists.

These painters were isolated by the political situation in Spain at the time. "The civil war broke off everything," said Pablo Lopez de Osaba, director of the Museum of Abstract Art in Cuenca. "The artists worked almost in a vacuum."

It was a total vacuum. Jose Guerrero, for example, went to New York in 1949 and his work showed the influence of the close personal cootact he had with artists such as Mark Rothko. But abstract art, as one of the few tolerated vehicles of political protest, had a special function in Spain. With the tradition of painters such as Picasso, Gris and Miro behind them, Spaniards began developing their own anti-state abstract art groups, first in Barcelona in 1948, then the El Paso group in Madrid.

There were also independent abstractionists such as Guerrero. Gustavo Torner and Fernando Zobel. It was primarily from these independent abstractionists that the Cuenca Museum grew.

The abstractionists were allowed. "Franco did oot really repress painters like writers," said Fernando Zobel. "We were used by Franco to say, "See, it's allowed." Of course, that was as long as you followed certain rules - didn't talk politics."

But abstract art was also ignored. Today, the Foundation Juan March, which owns the Cuenca Museum, is taking shows to people in the Spanish provinces and they are seeing abstract art for the first

"At the time [the 1950s] oo one was paying any attention to us," recalls Mr. Zobel. "The only people collecting the paintings were the painters themselves." The only collections were those of the painters painters themselves. The only considerable collection by trading like Mr. Zobel, who has amassed a considerable collection by trading with his friends. Eventually a group of these painters decided to look for a way to show the public their work. The town of Cuenca offered them a "hanging house" (so called because the 15th-century buildings are cantilevered on the edge of a 90-degree drop in a rocky gorge

The painters wanted to make it an artist's museum. They spent three years adapting the interior - the last year of which was speot on hanging paintings. "We tried to hang them the way artists like it," said Mr. Zobel. The result is one of the world's most perfect museums. The interior architecture, designed by painter Gustavo Torner, a native of Cuenca, combines the elements of the 15th-century wooden-bearned house with the sense of clean line and space needed to display abstract art. Around every corner is a visual impact, including windows revealing the rugged beauty of the countryside.

Today, many of the original artists, such as Torner, Zobel, Gerardo Rueda and Antonio Saura, live at least part of the year in Cuenca. The museum's collection has tripled and includes some newer abstractionists. But today's Spanish art has left the Franco era. 'The young now have books and masters and the possibility to see a Rothko," said Mr. Lopez de Osaba, "All the young know what they are doing in Los Angeles and Tokyo," The result is that there is oo longer a distinctly Spanish school, "The younger crowd could be almost anything," said Mr.Zobel, "They don't necessarily look Spanish. They look international, All of Europe is doing more or less the perversely answered last Feb. 23, when a pistol-waving Civil Guard named Antonio Tejero and 280 companions held the Spanish parliament hostage and ermy tanks rolled through the streets of Valencia.

A brief euphoria when the coup crumbled and pride in the king's heroic posture gave way to embarrassment at its comic opera aspects, the boldest golpe de estado since Gen. Pavia rode his horse up the steps of the Cortes (parliament) building in 1874. When reality sank in, it became clear that the coup was no mere crackpot stunt, but a serious attempt at armed rebellion which stretched high into the feared Spanish military establishment. Panic gripped Spain's politicians, most of whom had felt first-hand the brutal alternative to parliamentary debate.

President of the Basque government, Carlos Garaicoetxea, said, "February 23 defined the ground we walk on, the political realities of Spain."

Warning by King

Hours after the aborted coup, the king met political leaders and warned, "I invite all to reflect and reconsider postures that might lead to greater unity in Spain and more agreement among the Spanish people." In 24 hours, the country had changed. La politica de concertation (consensus politics)

Actually, the idea was not new. Burying party dogma for the com-mon good had produced the Mon-cloa Pact in 1977 and approval of the new Spanish Constitution a later. The first step was the confirmation of Premier Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, a respected adminis-

for consolidation of democracy. The opposition agreed.

Decisive Issues

The government and opposition parties were clearly frightened by Feb. 23 and proceeded as though walking through a mine field. The three most decisive issues in Spain — terrorism, unemployment and regional autonomy - were tackled. The army was sent to patrol the French border and new anti-terrorist measures adopted. A generous labor accord has defused strike threats for the moment and the autonomous process was "harmonized" in a bipartisan pact. Consensus was in bloom.

Other major bills were forced through the Cortes. A law in "de-fense of the Constitution" defined states of alarm, siege and emergency, during which civil rights con-The Socialist leader. Felipe trator from the strife-torn Center cerning search and detention and

If the plotters of Feb. 23 failed to set up their government of national salvation, some argued that a "de facto comp" had taken place, and worried that Spain's demo-cratic institutions might become mere window-dressing for a gov-ernment ruling from behind closed doors. Lenient treatment and the release of many accused conspirators fed fears that the government had capitulated. The mustachioed Col. Tejero, fast becoming a righting folk hero, relaxed, welcomed admirers and began writing his

er patsch. This collective paranoia was fueled by the spectacular as-sault on a Barcelona bank in May, when mysterious hoodlums demanded the release of ColTejero and others and were linked with another plan to bomb the Armed Forces Day Parade. A harebrained plot uncovered on June 23 involved a plan to kidnap the king at the Oriete Palace and force him to abdicate or flee.

Among the four military and eight civilians arrested and later released was National Police Commander Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas, co-plotter with Tejero in the bungled 1978 coup "Operation Galaxy." As late as Aug. 27, Portuguese intelligence services warned Madrid of an imminent putscb, which proved a false alarm. Coup predicting has be-come a popular diversion in Spain.

With the trial of the Feb. 23 conspirators still months away, several questions are still unanswered. Did prior knowledge prompt Adolfo Suarez to resign with hopes of defusing the coup? He denies be was tipped off. Did Spanish intelligence services fail to detect the plot or merely forget to report it? Some high-ranking offi-cers stand accused. What was the confusing role played by Gen. Alfonso Armada, deputy chief of staff and long-time royal confidant? During pre-trial testimony, he tried to implicate everyone from the Socialist Party to the king. How many of Spain's regional commanders were ripe for revolt on Feb. 23? Tough-talking Jaime Milans del Bosch said all but two.

Most interesting are the coup's civilian roots. Many believe that a vast network of rightist extremists planned and financed the coup, with army officers playing a sup-porting role and Col. Tejero the ultimate fall-gry. Suspicion centers on Antonio Giron de Velasco, 69, former minister of labor under Franco and head of the National Confederation of War Veterans, whose spokesman, the newspaper

El Alcazar, has been a ceaseless apologist for the golpistas. Mr. Giron, long fond of issuing apocalyptic manifestos, bas been accused by the Spanish magazine Cambio 16 of being godfather of the more than 100 civilians, including several former ministers, supposedly involved. He has not been officially charged.

PSOE Deputy Guillermo Galeote said, The coups were or-ganized by the extreme right and not the army, and as long as the government does not deactivate them we will live in a state of permanent golpe."

The Trial

All but one of the 33 accused of military rebellion are members of the armed forces or civil guard and the prosecutor is asking for sentences of six to 30 years. The military tribunal handling the case has already heard over 6,000 pages of statements, but the actual trial is not expected to commence until 'early next year. Some are eager to see justice, but others fear new and impleasant revelations about the depths of coups sympathy. Col. Tejero has named Gen. Jose Juste. first seen as an anti-coup hero, of co-conspiracy and he has been temporarily removed from his post. Some old-guard generals are being oudged into reserve status.

No ooe is sure which is more dangerous - to encourage another coup by failing to punish the plotters or to anger the army by arresting and trying everyone suspected in involvement. The up-coming court martial looms as the supreme test of the young Spanish democracy.

Meanwhile, the rule by consensus born in the shadow of February 23 seems unstable, as the UCD and PSOE lock horns over Spain's NATO entry and debate the toxic food-oil scandal. But the political factions should close ranks for the upcoming trial. Widespread solidarity might make another coup attempt an unthink-able risk. — MARK WILLIAMS

Most of Nation Supports Joining the Common Market

A MONG the staggering array of major decisions that are are facing Spain in the post-Franco push toward a modern European state, the one that has met with the most unanimity is entry into the Common Market. Political parties from left to right support entry, as do the labor unions, industrialists, businessmen, farmers and merchants

Spanish EEC relations go back to a 1962 pact with Franco, "It (EEC entry) was extremely desirable during the Franco era because we knew it was impossible," said Raimondo Bassols, Secretary of State for relations with the EEC.

After the establishment of the constitutional monarchy, entry be-came theoretically possible and the government was convinced that it was economically as well as politi-cally desirable. The EEC as a group is Spain's largest trading partner, representing half of the country's exports and more than a third of its exports.

Politically, the EEC has been eager to welcome Spain and even promises to speed up the process at politically rocky moments such as after the Feb. 23 attempted

"If we could begin speaking about agriculture," said Mr. Bas-sols, "I'm sure we could finish negotiating in a year." But the EEC has been unwilling to negotiate on this subject and even though there has been talk this fall of "deblocking" oegotiatioos, French Agricultural Minister, Edith Cresson, has made it clear that this subject will remain a major obstacle.

The EEC is exhausting its cash supply, which comes about half from value added taxes (VAT) and the rest from external duties and agricultural levies. To raise more money would involve a long and difficult ammendment procedure on the Rome treaty. The other so-lution is to spend less. The entry of Spain, like the January entry of Greece, would mean spending

The Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) alone, a complicated sys-tem of subsidies and price supports, devours three-quarters of

Mr. Bassols claims that Europe "has an enormous responsibility to help us" become a European de-mocracy. If the EEC does not take Spain, Mr. Bassols said, "The country would think it was for very small and egoistic reasons."

Obviously, all sides are looking after their own interests. While Spanish farmers want entry as soon as possible, the EEC wants a delay. But they would welcome Spanish industry from the moment of entry as a full parmer. Spanish industrialists, fearing tariff-free products from the North (especially threatening to small business), want a transition period of from five to 10 years. five to 10 years.

Full Benefits

On the other side, the Spanish government wants their workers to enter immediately with the full benefits of the EEC workers. The EEC wants a seven-year delay sim-ilar to the agreement with Greece Brussels also wants Spain to commit itself immediately by replacing its existing protectionist taxing system with a VAT system.

In the meantime, Spanish busi-oessmen are losing enthusiasm. Most government officials, includ-ing Mr. Bassols, agree that EEC entry is losing popular support.

Banking: A Period of Change

DRAMATIC changes are taking place in Spanish banking as the system is liberalized to conform with practice elsewhere in Europe. Altogether, counting industrial, regional and local en-terprises, Spain has 130 domestic banks but this number will probably be sharply reduced in ra-tionalization programs and through closure of the weaker brethren. More progressive banks have already taken steps to modernize and streamline their methods. Others, however, have encountered liquidity problems, often through becoming too deeply involved in industries which have been hard hit by recession, and their future is uncer-

Some could be sold to foreign interests, a trend which has already provoked chilly reactions among the country's Big Seven (the Banco Espanol de Credito, the Banco Central, the Banco de Bilbao, the Banco de Vizcaya, the Banco de Santander, the Banco Popular and the Banco Hispano Americano). In February, Britain's Bar-clays Bank bought the Banco de Valladolid for nearly $48 million, thus gaining access to 38 branches. In June, the Banque Nationale de Paris took over the Banca Lopez Quesada for close to $100 million. Both these once-ailing Spanish en-terprises had been resuscitated by the Corporacion Bancaria, an intensive care unit set up in March, 1978, with funds from private banks and the cantral bank

For Spain's better-managed banks, however, the picture is far from bleak. Last year, total prof-its for commercial banks soared 12 percent to $900 million while savings banks registered a 21 percent rise to $460 million. The greatest chal-

percent rise to 5460 minion. The greatest challenge arises from government determination to liberalize the system.

Important changes came early this year when interest rates on all loans were freed apart from the proportion of banks' funds devoted to the so-called "privileged circuits." In the past, banks had to make considerable proportions of their funds available for artificial low interest loans to emerging industries. The privileged circuit loans now bear higher interest rates.

Interest Rotes

Interest rates have also been freed on deposits of six months and over for sums of more than $10,000. Previously they were free only from one year and above. Maximum commissions charged by banks are now controlled. Previously they had been left to individual banks to fix and were a

The changes require profound adjustments in a business where methods are often antiquated and many branches. In the past banks operated with That is changing. The first step came in September, when the telephone and electricity companies were told they would have to pay for the handling of clients' bills.

Leading banks have accepted that they must tell the public more about their operations if confidence is to be maintained. The Banco Hispano Americano has been brushing up its image by changing its logotype and placing more emphasis on public relations. Computers are taking over many routine tasks, which may speed up the sometimes painfully slow processing of checks. Spain still only uses 500 million checks a year compared to 3,000 million in Britain, but credit cards show fast growth. The arrival of foreign banks is spurring the changes in attitudes and methods of Spanish Banking.

Until early 1979, domestic banks were shielded.

Uotil early 1979, domestic banks were shielded from foreign competition but since the barrier was raised, the oumber of non-Spanish banks has risen to 27. Allowed in under strict conditions have helped bring more flexibility to the money markets. To obtain access to a retail market, the foreign entities have successfully introduced bills of exchange on the stock market. But bankers complain that a tax on business transactions, imposed on their borrowings and then again on loans to clients, remains an important obstacle to creating an orderly interbank market.

Logns to Subsidiaries

Foreigners have tended to concentrate their activities on arranging loans to multinational mis-sidiaries, to large Spanish enterprises and on par-ticipating in syndicated credits. "Since we opened in June, 1979, the volume of business has far exceeded expectations," said Richard W. May, vice president of the Chase Manhattan Bank, which has just opened a new branch in Barcelons. He put down this success to the amount of liquidity available in the banking system due to a slow-down in industrial activity. Foreign banks had been able to use these funds and carve out a share of the market. In addition, the Banco de España's liberalizing campaign had assured a reliable interbank market.

Relations with Spanish colleagues were not a problem, said Mr.May. "Some Spanish banks might have felt that we were intruding on their game preserve for some easy poaching but today I other's potential." - DAVID BAIRD

Despite Strides for Energy Self-Sufficiency, Oil Bill Remains Huge

IN JULY, 1979, the Spanish par-liament approved a program called the National Energy Plan (PEN) that was aimed at reducing the country's energy import bill by developing alternatives in foreign oil. Two years later, PEN's report to parliament points to some successes but oil import spending has increased and still plays a major role in Spain's negative balance of

The most important energy al-ternatives envisaged by PEN are coal and nuclear power. The in-crease in coal powered energy, including three new plants and thirteen planned or under construction, represents most of the gains made against oil based energy (which still supplies two-thirds of the total primary energy). Coalbased energy production is ahead of PEN projections. The 1985 goal of 16.2 percent of the energy total had been ugraded to 22.6 percent and that is already within striking distance. Nuclear ambitions, on the other would be forced to add to its large and costly surpluses of products such as wine and sugar beets. Spain produces, by itself, almost as much olive oil as the Ten comregetable and citrus fruit markets.

Not only do these surpluses mean nonexistent money out of the EEC budget but unwanted competition with cheaper Spanish produce, particularly for France and Italy. France already has a trade deficit with Spain (although it has been more than halved in the past year). While France and the United Kingdom are still bristling from their lamb and apple wars, the Spanish are waiting in the wings with abundant productions hand, have been revised downward. The Spanish government is now hoping nuclear power will produce 10.9 percent of their energy by 1985 instead of the original 2 percent objective. They expect this percentage to reach 16 percent by 1990.

Meanwhile, the government is projecting that nuclear energy will represent three percent of this year's production which is only one percentage point better than two years ago. Last year's produc-tion dropped because the 469-megawatis General Electric reacat Sarita Maria de Garona (Burgos) was closed for five months due to a metalurgical de-

Spanish ouclear power began in 1968 with the 160-MW Westinghouse reactor at Zorita (Guadalajara). There are currently four numore under construction and two others in the planning stage.

The ouclear program is behind schedule for two reasons. The first and most important is that the complexity of the technology was underestimated by optimistic planoers. The other reason, which may grow in importance as the program expands, is popular resistence.

None of the national political parties oppose ouclear energy. The Socialists claim to prefer a more moderate program. While the ecology movement is not strong, it has in some regions become connected with popular autonomy, leftist and agrarian movements. This is par-ticularly true in Catalonia and the clear plants in operation, nine Basque provinces where ecologists sometimes complain that they cannot keep the protest focused on environmental issues.

Since the beginning of construc-tion, the Lemoniz plants (Viscaya) have experienced several setbacks from various forms of sabotage and both plant employees and a demonstrator have been killed. There has also been sabotage and local demonstrations against the Asco plant in Catalonia and ecologists are claiming increasing sup-port from local mayors in Extremedura and other regions.

Asked if it would not be better to avoid construction in areas where the population is opposed, Luis Magana, Commissioner of Energy and Mineral Resources for the Ministry of Industry and Enerthe Ministry of Industry and Engagy, replied, "To consider the proba-lem form a local point of viewing mistake." He said that it was "out-side of reality." Reality from the energy planning point of viewing that energy intensive industry par-ticularly in the Basque provinces, is draining energy from other man is draining energy from other parts of the country.

'Audit Fever' Is Widespread as New Legislation Looms

TN FRANCO'S SPAIN, tax eva-L sion was widespread (and connived at) and financial scandals were rarely subjected to the searing glare of public scrutiny. Things don't work like that in a democracy - even in a young and fragile one like Spain's — and the media have given a lot of publicity in recent months to the lack of financial control in the state-owned television company and the state-sponsored football federations. Even the recent tragic scandal in the food oil industry has, in its way, highlighted the absence of necessary checks and controls in the country's administrative infrastructure. The concept of public accouotability of management has grown up almost overnight, giving rise to what one magazine de-scribed as "andit fever." Public awareness will be further increased with Spain's entry into the Europe-an Economic Community, which will bring with it the obligation to introduce a panoply of financial legislation.

No Legal Status

The word auditoria is pretty much synonymous with the international accounting firms (often referred to as "the Big 8"), all of which are represented in Spain. The Big 8, most of which moved in on the back of foreign investment following Franco'a liberalization of the economy in 1959, probably now employ upward of 1,000 professionals in Spain. In most cases, they are still largely dependent on the multinationals for their bread and butter, but to an increasing ex- that do permit such associations market.

Their reports, however, have no legal status in Spain and, while some quoted companies are now including a Big 8 auditor's certificate in their annual report, it is usually published alongside that of the Censor Jurado de Cuentas (official statutory auditor) and that of the shareholders' auditor. This is clearly an anomalous situation and a temporary one.

The shareholders' auditors are elected under the requirements of company law from the shareholders and need oot be professionaly qualified. The first tentative approach to an independent scrutiny of accounts originally introduced by the 1951 Companies Act has been almost totally ineffective.

The Spanish accounting profes-sion was incorporated in 1942 as the Instituto de Censores Jurados de Cuentas de Espana. The principal function of the censor has been to report on the accounts of quoted companies under the rules of the stock exchange. However, in the absence of an effective watchdog like the SEC, even this requirement has frequently not been complied with.

Can't Join Forces Moreover, until recently, the code of ethics of the censor prohi-bited him from forming partnerships with other censores and thus Spanish professionals have been unable to join forces to meet the challenge of the international firms. However, new statutes of the Institute have been introduced

The Spanish Institute bas about 3,000 members with about 200 engaged in auditing as a full-time profession, a figure eclipsed by the 1,000 professionals employed by the Big 8. Furthermore, many of the 200 are now employees or part-ners of the Big 8 firms.

A year ago, the draft of a new company law that proposes to introduce a mandatory audit require-ment for all sociedades anonimas corporations became known, It is estimated that if the bill is passed in its present form, the Spanish economy would require about 15,000 full-time audit professiooals. Moreover, this new company law does not include the requirements of the EEC'a Fourth Directive, and, therefore, will probably require amendment as soon as it reaches the statute books.

GAAS and GAAP

As a partner of one Big 8 firm said, "The cake will be large enough for everyone." A valid question might well be: "But is the profession oble to digest it?"

GAAS and GAAP are two beloved acronyms understood by the accounting community worldwide. They stand, respectively, for Gen-erally Accepted Auditing Stand-ards (codifying the procedures and standards an accountant must apply when auditing accounts) and nerally Accepted Accounting Principles (the framework against which the auditor must evaluate and judge the accounts). GAAS and GAAP are concepts developed in the United States and that have been exported, with varying degrees of success, to Spain.

The Big 8 firms, not recognized and therefore not controlled by the apply the same anditing standards in Spain as in the Spanish profession, have sought to Spain as in the United States. Auditing standards for general application in Spain comparable with those of the AICPA (American Institute of Corporate Public Accountants) bave oot been published by the Spanish Institute, although it has published guidelines that are similar to the U.S. audit requirements. In the future, as the Institute grows, it must be assumed that it will observe standards comparable with those in the world. These tax regulations bave since been amplified and confirmed by the Plan General de Contabilidad, a mandatory code of accounts modeled oo a French plan. By way of example, a company is in effect prohibited from accounting for unrealized losses on exchange on its annual report. While much has to be done in the area of formulating accounting principles and achieving the con-sensus necessary for them to become generally accepted, much is being done in the area by the Institute itself and by private enterprises such as the Asociacion Espanola de Contabilidad (AECA). Once the consensus is achieved, it will be the job of the auditing profession to ensure its fair application.

Admission to EEC

Against its hackground of change and ferment, another major but largely unexplored factor is Spain's future admission to the EEC, which oow seems almost cer-

Admission to the EEC will mean a welter of change in the whole area of fiscal, accounting and company legislation. A draft law introducing value added tax (VAT) from 1982 is shortly to be laid before the parliament, superseding the old turnover tax. Given the fairly basic level of accounting in many small and medium-sized Spanish business, the introduction of VAT, with its sophisticated accounting requirements, is sure to provide exciting times both for the fiscal authorities and the account-

The introduction of the company-law harmonization program in the EEC is causing something of a silent revolution throughout all the accounting fraternities. Spain's entry into the community means that will have to comply with the Directives on Company Law that have been issued by the EEC. The most significant of these directives is the fourth, which sets out formats for and requires mandatory audits of company accounts that EEC members are bound to imple-

The Seventh Directive will require the preparation of group ac-counts by any Spanish company that is a member of the group. A recent survey cooducted by one of the Big S firms found that very few major Spanish companies pre-pared consolidated accounts, although some are beginning to do so. At present, Spain has no mandatory requirements for a group to publish consolidated financial statements

The advent of the EEC, apart from its enormous economic impact, will, because of the mandatory audit requirements, place oew burdens on the legislator, auditor and, above all, the husiness community as a whole.

Thus, the andit fever of the last 18 months has probably created expectations in excess of the Spanish profession's present ability to meet them. No profession or professional firm should expand at a rate that imperils the quality of its services. The rule is "hasten slow-

Home Rule Ends a Tradition

JUST MINUTES before a self-imposed mid-night deadline on Friday, July 31, weary negotiators emerged from President Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo's smoky Moncloa office. While skepues fear a shady deal, most are relieved. After four mooths of intensive talks, Spain's two major political parties — the government Center (UCD) and Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) — have signed an accord sorting out the nanon's most intractable problem, regional home rule.

The PSOE leader, Felipe Gonzalez, said at the time. "We are not applying the brakes, but putting the autonomy process in its proper historical rhythm."President Calvo Sotelo said. "It is a decisive step in the transition of the Spanish govern-

Spanish home rule puts an end to nearly three centuries of centralist tradition and lays the framework for a federal system by partially dismantling Madrid's unwieldy bureaucratic ma-chine. Months before the pact, both sides agreed that autonomy had lost direction and leaders hoped to make clear where and how far the process was going. No ooe was forgetting that a ma-jor objective for the February golpistas was to halt "the dismemberment of Spain."

The July pact, which will become law as LOA-PA, was based on two technical studies hammered out by legal experts. The Enterria Reports over-riding coocerns were to clearly define the powers and responsibilities of the central government and regions and establish the economic base through which the transfer of power can take place.

Autonomous Units

The political and administrative map of Spaio has been redrawn to ioclude 16 autocomous units, which will eventually assume roughly half the government's administrative chores and hudget. The accord sets a deadline of February, 1983, for all regions to enter the autocomous framework. though the actual transfer of powers will go on for years. The pact also set up a clearing fund to help reduce economic differences between the region (the average income in Catalonia, for example, is more than double the income in Galicial.

According to the Office of Diplomatic Informa-tion, this will "prevent regional autonomy from becoming a sort of labyrinth in which the richer regions might draw ahead of the poorer ones, creating a dangerous race to achieve ever greater self-government." Clearly, many believed that home rule was developing into a kind of administrative Franken-stein's monster. Martin Villa, minister of territorial administration, said, "The previous course was irregular, illogical and filled with uncertainties."

The accord emphasizes the unity of the Spanish market, with no restrictions on free movement of capital and labor, thus allaying businessmen's fears that Spain might revert to "economic feudalism." Purely regional concerns like tourism, agriculture and internal transport are distinguished from those involving administrative decentralization of national policy in commerical legislation. customs, banking and energy planning.

Though still in the process of receiving full powers. Catalonia and the Basque country have had home rule for two years, and on Oct. 20. Galicia elected its regional parliament and Andalucia approved its own statute. With these four regions launched, the two major parties decided to depoliticize the issue at a time when popular enthusiasm was waning. By granting autonomy to everyone, including regions where little home rule sentiment existed, those areas with strong and potentially dangerous separatist tendencies find themselves sharing their "special status." "Wine with too much water." said one critic.

The pact also put a ceiling on the content and implications of the statutes, clearly defining how far home rule can go. This disappoints those who saw the stantes as points of departure for everincreasing rights. The door is also left open for more municipal and provincial powers at the expense of the regions.

From the outset, representatives of the Catalan and Basque governments have looked warily at the pact and LOAPA, despite repeated govern-ment assurances that it does not affect existing statutes. The Catalan mioority leader, Miguel Roca, said. "It could be a dangerous instrument — Catalonia comes out losing." The accusations from Catalonia and the Basques have heated up recently.

Accusations of foot-dragging in Madrid seem unfounded. Nearly 100,000 government employ-ces and $1.9 billion have been transferred in the last two years, mostly to Catalonia. In May, 14 new areas of responsibility were handed over to the Basque region, which has also woo the right to collect its own taxes.

Throughout modern Spanish history, transitions to greater liberty and democracy have been accompanied by home rule demands, and the heady post-Franco era was no exception. The new autonomy statutes already grant more power than those of the Second Republic.

During the first months of new Spanish democracy, political pressures for regional autonomy were enormous, and many believe the process

"The time for politics is over - now it's time for logic," said President Calvo Sotelo. For some, part of the logic is recalling that every Spanish miliary officer swears an oath "to preserve the unity of Spain.

'Arms and the Man' Pairs Remarkable Shavian Duo

By Sheridan Morley

nal Herald Tribune ONDON - Popular belief has it that "My Fair Lady" is the only major musical to have been derived from a Shaw play, and popular belief is of course mistaken; Richard Rodgers did a musical "Androcles," and within 15 years of the 1894 premiere of "Arms and the Man" Oscar Straus had turned it into "The Chocolate Soldier." That hasn't been seen in London since 1940 but now, at the Lyric, there is a chance to see the Shavian original in its first West End revival since the 1944 production by the Old Vic with Lawrence Olivier as Sergius and Ralph Richardsoo

Curiousty this one comes not from either of the major subsidized companies, who are inclined to like their Shaw longer and beavier, but from Eddie Kulukundis, who has been operating a one-man royal Shavian company for several years, buying up stage rights with all the fervor once exhibited on screen by Gabriel Pascal, Accordingly we have a solid commercial company led by Richard Briers as Bluntschli and Peter Egan as the posturing Sergius, and the result is a sort of caramel-cream show, light and elegant in taste but not linger-ing long on the palate. This is anyway the kind of Shaw to which people should be taken who hate Shaw; it has few of the lengthy diatribes, little of the politics and almost cone of the fervor that characterized most of his later and better works. It is at best a kind of divertissement, a light comedy about a couple of soldiers of fortune falling in love with the same ravishing Bulgarian girl.

What distinguishes this production is the remarkable double-act of Briers and Egan. Though they have oever to my knowledge worked together before, they look as though they bave been at it all their professional lives, complementing and counterbalancing each other like a Ruritanian Laurel and Hardy.

In this pairing Egan is the tall thin one, forever striking operatic and melodramatic poses from which be has to scramble down when the going gets too rough, while Briers is the little chubby one, all practical advice until he too falls suddenly and hopelessly in love with Raina, played in a dazzlingly beautiful West End debut by Alice Krige. Then there are Raina's pragmatic parents, equally splendidly played by Richard

the result under Jonathan Lynn's agile direction is an infinitely elegant little light comedy about soldierly fantasies and the deflating of uniform egos.

All the same, I am inclined to wish they had learned to sing and had done "The Chocolate Soldier" instead (the title incidentally derives from Bluntschli's passion for boxes of sweets). For whereas with "Pygmalioo" you felt you were losing a lot of the best argu-ment every time "My Fair Lady"

broke off for a song, with "Arms and the Man" you feel that a song or three would help the evening along. It is short (two hours with an intermission, which by Shavian standards makes it practically a curtain-raiser) and apart from a minor Balkan war not a lot happens before everyone lives bappily ever after. For all that, it's the kind of show that many believed the West End had abandoned for musicals and farces, and I suspect it will be around for many months to plug precisely that gap in the mar-

When I was a child, in the late 1940s in case you were wondering. London was full of plays like Ellen Dryden's "Harvest" (at the Am-

titles-like "Holly and the Ivy" or "Dear Octopus," but the fundamental theme always concerned a black sheep returning to the midst of a family during some kind of calendar celebration, often Christmas or a golden wedding and opening various childhood cupboards to watch the skeletons pour

This time, the celebration is the harvest festival, the family is beavily Methodist but outside of that not a lot has changed Lynn Far-leigh is the daughter who, having hauled herself up through university and away from an oppressively genteel and deprived background and then made a rich but unhappy marriage, oow returns to the parental bearth to find out why her brother has had a oervous breakdown, whether or not the local minister is burying her grandfather properly, and how totally her own life has been conditioned by ber childhood and its everlasting mem-Accordingly we are back in gen-eration gap, with Constance Chapman as the grandmother, Mary Chester as the mother and Sylvestra Le Touzel as the young niece representing the three generations of the upright, clinging and oddly unlikable family. The only outsider allowed on stage is the minister, played in a wonderful state of bemused reticence by David Horovitch. Farleigh as the one who has gone over the wall plays Marian much as Glenda Jackson played "Rose" in this same management's previous production, which is to say angrily and very well. But in the end we have to care deeply about why her brother has abandoned his mature studentship and in fact we don't: despite the occasional good line ("You get a better class of guilt with Catholics than Methodists") the play gives you the feeling that you have been trapped in a pub with a family desperately rehearsing for "This Is Your Life." It's an untidy, meandering evening in which flashbacks are used only to explain to us that this family's past was no more in-triguing than its present; Ellen Dryden doubtless has something to say about the oppressive nature of Methodism in Midlands family life circa 1950 and its effects, but it is not enough to fill out an entire evening. As an hour-long television script it might have been smashing.

Fiendish Pyramid Challenges the Maddening Cube

L up a puzzle vastly more complex and more maddening than Rubik's Cube when he was painting his house.

"If these windows were triangles instead of squares I'd only have to paint three sides," his wife recalls him muttering.

Thus was born Eliot's "Great Pyramid Puzzle," a construction of triangles which could make you a millionaire if it does not drive you to distraction first.

Eliot, 41, burled $1,850 out the window into a street near Piccadilly Circus the other day - be is given to such gestures. As kids and housewives and executives battled for the rain of money, he explained his new instrument of torture.

"It's a tetrahedron, a four-sided pyramid," he said. "There are 36 triangular pieces you stick onto it. Each piece has a pattern, and you put on the pieces so the patterns match.
"A child of 6 could do it."

Well, maybe. Eliot calculates there are 72,000 trillion trillion possible combinations and exactly one solution. He said he pit his puzzle against a California computer which solved Rubik's Cube in seven days. Yet completing the 36-piece pattern is only the first part of the puzzle. Each piece has a numerical value," Eliot said. He gives the figure for one piece - 126. Then "all you have to do is figure out how I arrived at that figure. That enables you to calculate the value of the other 35 pieces. "One face of the completed pattern totals 864 - that's the other clue, so you can check your values are correct.

Then you write down the value totals of the four faces, and if you get it right first, you're a millionaire."

Eliot means the millionaire bit literally. For every puzzle sold, $1.85 goes into a bank account held in trust for the first puzzle solver. If 1 million fiendish pyramids are sold — and his U.S. partner talks of potential sales in the millions there alone — the winner will become an instant millionaire.

"It's my contention that there won't be a solution in the first year," Eliot said. No winner will be declared until next September. "It could take longer, even though there's no complicated mathematics involved," Eliot said. "A bright 10-year-old could do the decoding without pen and paper.

knows the answer. One night came the awful thought that an unscrupulous bloke could profit mightily by knowing that answer. So he insured himself at Lloyd's of London for $1.85 million against being kidnapped.

The "Great Pyramid Puzzle" sells by mail order in England and is being marketed in Japan as well as the United States. "It's the most difficult game in the world." Eliot said immodestly.

Starring Carl Reiner in the Carl Reiner Talk Show

By Jeffrey Robinson

AINT-PAUL-DE-VENCE, S AfNT-PAUL-DE-VENCE, France — When Carl Reiner walked into the Colombe d'Or hotel bere to do his bit on camera. the first thought that ran through his mind was. "Any minute now Yves Mootand is going to walk around the corner." It seems to be his first thought every time he comes bere.

Reiner was here to tape some segments for the John Donaldson talk show in the United States. A writer, actor, film director, television producer, constant guest on the talk-show circuit, he is all of those things separately and rolled into one.

"I went into show business at the age of 17. I'm now 59. I've spent those years inching up on mediocrity." He landed a few roles on Broadway in the late '40s as an actor, dancer and singer.

Second Banana to Caesar

His Broadway experiences landed him a job in 1950 on "Your Show of Shows" with Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca. Reiner was hired as an actor, sort of a second banana, but he found himself sitting in on the writers' meeting too, adding his own shtick whenever be could. At various times the writing staff of that show included people like Neil Simon (later the author of "The Odd Couple" and other stage comedies) and Mel Brooks (with whom Reiner made the best-selling "2,000 Year Old Man" albums). Brooks remains Reiner's oldest and dearest friend. "Mel is a very oourishing person on a one-to-one basis. Otherwise, he's a lunatic. However, you can always call on him for medical advice. He knows everything about the medical pro-fession. He's one of the world's most wonderfully brilliant bypo-

"Show of Shows" lasted until 1954. Reiner then moved with Sid Caesar to "Caesar's Hour," another live years of being an actor-writer. He followed that with a oneyear stint as writer and occasional uest on the "Dinah Shore Show." Then he created and produced a successful situation comedy called "The Dick Van Dyke Show." Not surprisingly, it was the story of a comedy writer of a weekly television show. At about the same time he wrote a book called "Enter Laughing." That was quickly numed into a Broadway play of the same name. "It was a not-too-well read book but its was a very well

By this time, Reiner had stuck up a minor friendship with Yves Montand. It dated from the Sid Caesar days when Mootand appeared on the show and did a few of those very French ballads with an involved story and a message. The next week, Reiner appeared on the show doing his imitation of Montand, He announced that he was going to sing a beautiful French song entitled Broken Cookies and Red Balloons," which of course he had written. And then he spent the oext 10 minutes explaining the story of the song in the Montand

Montand Right on Cue

A few years later, Reiner and his wife, Estelle, showed up at the Co-lombe d'Or. He found it so typically French that while they were checking in he turned to Estelle and said, This is exactly the kind of place where you'd expect to see around the corner." Just as he said it, guess who said, "Hi Carl." Montand was there right on cue. It was one of those truly incredible coincidences. Estelle thought I had planned it. I stood there with my hands shaking swearing f didn't." So oow when be walks into the Colombe d'Or, he looks first around the corner for Montand. Then he tells the story to whomever he's with, then slips into a few choruses of "Broken Cookies and Red Balloons."

Bank Sources Confirm Reports of AEG Loss

FRANKFURT — Banking sources said Wednesday that press reports In Spending hat AEG-Telefunken is expecting a loss of 650 million Deutsche marks his year unless new financial measures are adopted were broadly corect. A spokesman for West Germany's second largest electrical group would only say the reports' figures are speculation.

The reports showed an AEG plan to cover the loss with 410 million

DM of gains from possible oew partnership arrangements and 240 milion DM in financial aid from banks. Banking sources said they expected AEG to lose 650 million DM in 1981 and to gain a net 410 million DM rom joint ventures. The AEG group lost 278 million DM in 1980 and 368 million DM in 1979.

In a meeting last week between AEG management and the 25 banks that rescued it two years ago, the banks agreed to keep current credit lines open and extend the period of favorable interest rates due to expire this year. Talks are being held this week with other AEG creditor banks and an announcement on bank aid is due Friday.

Shell, BP Drop Rotterdam Terminal Plan

ROTTERDAM — Royal Dutch-Shell and British Petroleum said Wednesday that they had dropped plans to build a liquefied petroleum gas terminal in the Europeort harbor area here.

They said stringent environmental and safety regulations would add 200 million to 300 million guilders ($79 million to $118 million) to the cost of the 350-million-guilder project. They also said the Dutch government's decision to designate a second LPG landing point in Flushing was another reason to scrap the plans.

Grumman Is Optimistic About Sale to France

From Agency Dispatches

BETHPAGE, N.Y. - Grumman is optimistic about an initial sale of four to six E-2C Hawkeye radar planes to France, a spokesman said Wednesday in response to an inquiry. He said Grumman's aerospace division had been working on the sale for several years.

The spokesman confirmed a newspaper report from Paris saying that the French government had requested information from Grumman and the U.S. Defense Department, adding that this appeared to be just another step in the process of selling the planes.

Le Monde said the French Air Force was also considering buying Airborne Warning and Control System planes produced by Boeing and the installation of radar equipment made by the Marconi Group of Britain on the Transall aircraft that already are in operation.

FTC Moves to Stop LTV Bid for Grumman

WASHINGTON - The Federal Trade Commission asked a federal district court in New York on Wednesday to issue a preliminary injunction to block LTV from acquiring 70 percent of Grumman's stock.

The FTC said the purchase would lessen competition in the carrierbased aircraft field and would therefore violate antitrust law. "If the proposed acquisition is allowed to go forward, and is then found unlawful, separating the companies' would be difficult and would likely weak-ten one of the firms," the FTC said.

American Can to Buy Insurance Concern New York Times Service

NEW YORK - American Can Co. said late Tuesday that it has agreed to acquire Associated Madison Companies, an insurance concern, for $140 million in a tax-free exchange of cash and stock. Associated will become a wholly owned subisidary of American Can.

The acquisition would be the company's first in its asset redeployment program announced last spring, when American Can announced it would sell its forest products division, estimated to be worth $700 million, and use the cash to invest in a new business segment.

William Woodside, American Can's chairman, said Tuesday that he expects to sell the paper division by the end of the year, but that further acquisitions in financial services would probably not be made until after the paper division is sold.

Fight Over Tax Advantage Is Ended by U.S., Europe

By Jane Seaberry .

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The United States, the Common Market and three European countries have tentatively agreed to call a cesse-fire in the fight to climinate a 10-yearold section of the U.S. tax code that saves U.S. exporting companies more than $1 billion a year.

The agreement, if approved by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, will end a dispute be-tween the Europeans and U.S. trade officials over claims that the United States is subsidizing exports through the tax, contrary to GATT rules.

The GATT also labeled the tax systems of France, Belgium and he Netherlands as export subsi-fies. Under the tentative agreepent, disputes about their taxes also will be dropped, according to U.S. trade representative.

Mr. MacDonald said he would France to Control agreement as a concession by the ommon Market but as "a cessaion of the battle without agreeing inyone is guilty or innocent." However, another trade official aid any country could bring a complaint against any of the tax systems at a later time, but that apcars unlikely.

U.S. 1981 Deficit Exceeds Forecast

United Press International WASHINGTON - The federal leficit for the fiscal year just end-d was $57.9 billion, $2.3-billion igher than the administration's orecast. The figure, announced jointly Vednesday by the Treasury De-artment and the Office of Mangement and Budget, could in-rease skepticism on Wall Street nd Capitol Hill about forecasts

The bigger the deficit the more ae government has to borrow and ne greater the upward pressure on nierest rates.

The administration had forecast 1981 fiscal year deficit of $55.6 illion. The deficit for 1980 was wised to be $59.5 billion after toving $561 million in income om oil lease bids into 1981. The deficit figures resulted from deral outlays of $660.5 billion ot entirely covered by the $602.6

U.S. exports, help the balance of trade and shore up the dollar. The GATT has avoided making a decision on the tax break since its inception, and the question was ex-pected to arise next week. The

Reagan administration at one point had considered substituting another incentive for the paper subsidiaries to resolve the issue. The major beneficiaries of the tax break are large firms such as General Electric, Boeing and Mon-santo Chemical, which have gained about $10 billion at the expense of the Treasury. The companies are expected to benefit by about $1.8 billion oext year.

Mr. MacDonald said that in 1972 the Common Market challenged the paper subsidiaries as subsidies because they did not place the same tax burden on exports as on domestic products.

Sales by Firms Set for Takeover

PARIS - French firms listed for nationalization will need govern-ment permission before they sell assets to foreign concerns, the Economy Ministry said Wednes-day. The restriction also applies to sales of assets by the firms' subsidiaries abroad, it added.

The move follows last week's takeover by Geneva-based Parzesa Holding of the Swiss subsidiary of Cie. Financière de Paris et des Pays-Bas. Paribas is due to be na-tionalized and Pargesa's action angered the French government.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Belgian Foreign Ministry said in Brussels that his country considers that France may not be offering sufficient compensation to foreign interests affected by the nationalization program, although the ministry has yet to establish the value of Belgian interests affected.

He said the ministry will make an inventory of Belgian interests when the program is adopted by the French Parliament and that Belgium may ask France to open negotiations on the subject.

However, France has said that it does not intend to increase compensation terms for foreign shareholders of firms marked for nationalization. Foreign bankers said after meeting in London that the compensation offer was inade-quate, and that they would seek

Bonn Cabinet Accepts Cuts

BONN — After a tense debate, the West German Cabinet gave provisional backing Wednesday to a package of measures designed to bridge a gap of 7.8 billion marks ($3.4 billion) in the 1982 budget, a government spokesman said.

The spokesman, Kurt Becker, said at a news conference that the package, agreed upon in talks between the governing coalition of Social Democrats and Free Democrats on Monday, was approved "with a small oumber of adjustments."

He said the most difficult issues were proposed cuts of 200 million DM in the defense budget, which were unsuccessfully resisted by Defense Minister Hans Apel, and 100 million DM in the education budget, which were successfully resisted by Education Minister Bjorn

In another economic development, the government statistics office said the preliminary cost-of-living index rose 0.4 percent in October after a 0.5 percent increase in September. The index stood 6.8 percent higher in October than a year ago and compared with a 6.5 percent year-on-year increase in

The increase was the biggest year-on-year increase for any month since October, 1974, when it was 7 percent. These "provision-al" cost-of-living figures are taken from four of West Germany's 11 states. Final figures are expected in about 10 days.

Speaking of the budget decisions, Mr. Becker said Defense Minister Apel "took note of the Cabinet's decision" to impose the defense cut, and that Education Minister Bjorn Engholm had succeeded in winning a reprieve on the proposed education cut.

The gap of 7.8 billion DM in the 1982 budget has arisen because the slower than expected economic recovery has meant that tax revenues would be 4.2 billion DM less than anticipated under last month's budget draft. Unemployment ben-efits will be 2.8 billion DM higher and subsidies to the coal and steel industries 800 million DM higher than expected

The shortfall will be covered largely by taking 3.9 billion DM more from Bundesbank profits, and by raising 2.85 billion DM through higher employment insur-ance contributions, Mr. Becker

A government spokesman also announced that Cabinet ministers and other officials will decline pay increases in 1982 forseen by law. gesture aimed at German unions, which begin new contract talks early next year.

It calls for construction of massive tankers. each capable of carrying 140,100 cubic meters (4.9 million cubic feet) of gas, which would take on-gas at a submerged Arctic terminal and ferry it out to an open-water port in eastern Canada or

The proposal says the tankers, costing an estimated $700 million each if powered by methane gas and $725 million each if nuclear-powered, would be "competitive economically" with a fleet of ice-breaking surface tankers under study in Canada and cheaper than a pipeline.

"It's a feasibility study," said L. E. Holt, an Electric Boat representative. "It asks if such a system is technically feasible. The answer is yes. It asks if it's economically viable. The answer is yes." The next step, he said, is to create interest among potential customers.

The idea of ouclear-powered underwater tankers — each 1,470 feet (448 meters) long and 228 feet (69 meters) wide — represents a refinement of a proposal that was seriously studied in the 1960s. before the Alaskan oil pipeline was built, to transport crude oil from Alaska's North Slope, maritime experts said. The Electric Boat proposal was prepared by P. Takis Veliotis, general manager of the company's Groton, Conn., shipyard, and his deputy, Spencer Reitz. Mr. Velious, an experienced builder of surface LNG tankers, bas for the past four years been director of the submarine construction program at the Grotoo shipyard, the builder of Tri-

Transportation of liquefied natural gas is more difficult technically than transportation of crude oil because it must be maintained at a temperature of minus 259 degrees fahrenheit (minus 126 Celsius). Surface LNG tankers are among the most expensive and complex ships in the civilian merchant fleet.

in 1980, ITT's operations in the United States accounted for 39 percent of consolidated sales and 48 percent of net income. Western Fig. Europe accounted for about 53 percent of sales.

Analysts said that since ITT derives such a large portion of its business from overseas, net mar-gins will continue to be penalized in the fourth quarter by the continued strengthening of the dollar abroad. They said, however, that they expected operating earnings to improve for the entire year with gains in the telecommunications and electronics and consumer products groups more than offsetting lower profits from the engineering products and natural resources groups.

"On an operational basis, we continue to project that the second half and full year will produce higher operating earnings than those in 1980, exclusive of the gain of 62 cents s share in 1980 on the sales of British Colombia timber facilities and an extraordinary loss of 13 cents a share in 1981 on the. settlement of the Hartford tax litigation," said Rand Araskog, ITI's chairman.

In May 1981, ITT settled all pending federal income tax matters arising from the 1970 acquisition of Hartford Fire, resulting in an extraordinary charge of $17.8 million, taken in the first quarter.

In the latest three months ITT'soperating earnings, excluding the impact of foreign-currency exchange, increased 2 percent on a per share basis, to $165.6 million, or $1.16 s share, from $166.6 mition, or $1.14 a share; B year ago.

In U.S., Huge Private Debt Becomes Threat

New York Thnes Service

NEW YORK - While political and public attention has been focused on the growing U.S. public debt, which has already hit $1 trillion and could spurt another 30 percent before the 1984 presidential election, the more alarming threat to the stability of the economy appears to be a mountain of pri-

A study prepared by the Bank of New York's industrial economist Paul Wexler shows that, with swollen debts, shrunken profits (after allowing for inflation) and reduced reliance on internally generated funds, most industries have undergone a serious deterioration in their liquidity.

Within the manufacturing sector, the study shows, liquidity positions of corpora-tions have fallen to their lowest levels in two decades. For instance, in the early 1960's, according to the Wexler data, the auto industry had a cash ratio — that is, cash and shortterm investments as a percentage of current liabilities — of 98 percent. That ratio has now fallen to 15 percent.

The tire and rubber industry in the early 1960's had a cash ratio of 43 percent; it has now dropped to 9 percent. The steel industry's cash ratio, 112 percent two decades ago, has fallen to 19 percent.

The chemical industry, over the same period, has allowed its cash ratio to drop from $1 to 14 percent; conferrous metals, from 97 to 21 percent; paper, from 85 to 25 percent; textiles, from 41 to 12 percent; nonelectrical machinery, from 73 to 13 percent, and electrical machinery, from 77 to 14 percent.

Other measures of corporations' short-term liquidity and of their ratios of longterm debt to equity, internal funds to capital expenditures and interest coverage show similar deterioration. The 1980 recession, quickly followed by the recession of 1981 but with high interest rates persisting, gravely aggravated the liqui-dity strains of many firms. The bank's study the most acute dangers are found in small companies, such as those in housing.

While all the financial positions of all the industries studied by the bank have deteriorated, Mr. Wexler said in an interview, the lowest levels of liquidity are those in autos, steel and textiles, followed by a second tier that includes chemicals, paper and rubber --old-line industries that have suffered inroads from the heavy competition from abroad.

The deterioration in manufacturing liquidity is due in large measure to the coolinuing gap between cash flow and capital expenditures. Many corporations have tried to cover the gap by borrowing short-term, with the bond market nearly dead and bank credit squeezed by the Federal Reserve.

A deep and long-lived slump could jeopardize the existence of many of these companies. This is why the most crucial question facing the Reagan administration is how to keep this recession moderate and turn it around before it cracks open highly illiquid

North Sea Strike To Last a Week

OSLO - A strike by 800 oil and gas workers on Norway's Ekofisk and Frigg fields, said by govern-ment officials to be costing 150 million kroner (about $25 million) in output a day, is likely to last at least a week, a government spokes-man said Wednesday.

A labor court official gave next Monday as the day it was expected to consider moves by Phillips Pe-troleum and Elf Aquitaine, respecovely operators at Ekofisk and Frieg, to have the strike declared illegal and in violation of labor contracts. He said an announcement of the findings could not be expected until Thursday or Friday. Some 500 production workers struck Toesday on the 22 installa-tions of the Ekofisk field, bringing oil deliveries to Teesside, northern England and Emden, West Germany, to a standstill.

A few hours later 300 gas production workers on the Frigg field, further north, joined the Ekofisk workers in support of a pay claim.

Finance Ministry officials said the previous high trade surplus of $3.1 billion was set in March. September's surplus was paced by exports of electrical equipment, including video cas-sette recorders, and textiles, although shipments of steel and ve-hicles slowed, they said.

In August, the trade surplus was $1.74 billion and the figure in Sep-tember 1980 was $1.8 billion. Meanwhile, the deficit on conmerchandise trade narrowed to $1.06 billion from $1.28 billion in August and compared with an $874-million deficit a year earlier. South Korea Sets Goal For Auto Sales Abroad

SEOUL - South Korea plans 10 increase its annual vehicle exports to 85,000 by 1986, more than three times the 1980 exports of 25.252, commerce and industry ministry officials say.

The offficials said the country plans to export 63,000 cars and 22,000 buses and trucks by 1986. South Korea, which sold 19,700 cars abroad in the first nine months of this year, hopes to reach 28,000 by the end of the year. The government on Oct. 2 revised its fiscal 1981 current-account target to a $7-billion surplus from a $6-billion deficit. The fiscal 1980 current account showed a deficit of $7.01 billion.

Septemeber's payments surplus was aided by an inflow of $1.48 billion of net investments by nonresidents in Japanese securities, mainly invested in bonds. Net sales of shares by foreign investors in September totalled $544 million. up from $285 million in August. following a sharp fall in share prices on the Japanese stock market.

Japan's fiscal 1980 overall balance of payments produced a $380-million deficit against the record $18.54-billion shortfall a year earlier. The government has made no fiscal 1981 overall payments projection.

In August, the country's current account had a surplus of $393 million. The first-half surplus was $4.84 billion compared with a $5.54-billion deficit a year ago.

In September, 1980, Japan had a $946-million overall balance of payments surplus and a $853-mil-lion current-account surplus.

manist Party daily Wednesday at-tacked U.S. Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge and the U.S. State John Holdridge and the US ambassador to the United Nations, Jeane Kirkpatrick, for their remarks on Indochina, saying the United States had not learned from its defeat in the Vietnam War.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick of "rudeness" in her speech to the UN General Arthusembly on Oct. 22, and rejected Mr. Holdridge's statement to Configress Monday that "Hanoi generally remains a menace to other countries of the region."

Kirkpatrick's speech and Hol-dridge's statement were all in coptext with the Reagan administra-tion's policy ... the essence of which is the return of the United States to Southeast Asia and in-creasing U.S. military involvement in this region," the paper said.

Swiss Cabinet Approves Disputed Nuclear Plant

The Associated Press
BERN --- The Swiss Cabinet of BERN — The Swiss Cabinet or Wednesday approved construction of a 920-megawatt nuclear power plant at Kaiseraugst near Basel, thus leaving to the parliament the final say on the internationally contested project.

The move had been expected after the Kaiseraugst consortium, which comprises Swiss, French

Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, Limited

(Incorporated in the Republic of South Africa)

Extracts from the Chairman's Review by Mr. G. H. Waddell.

The Annual General Meeting of the Company will be held in Johannesburg on 9 November 1981 at 12 noon.

The profit after taxation attributable to ordinary share-holders of R97.8m was the highest yet achieved. Earnings er share of 1373 cents were 35.5 per cent higher than the com-proble figure of 1016 cents in the previous financial year rdinary dividends for the year were increased by 26.3 percent 5 600 cents per share.
The higher profit was attributable largely to an increase of 15.8m in dividend accruals from Johnnics interests in The onth African Breweries, platinum and gold; an increase of (7.9m in net interest earned; and an increase of R3.6m in the rofits from Lenning Holdings Limited and Tavistock ollicries Limited.

On 22 June 1981, in terms of a scheme of arrangement, ovistock Collieries Limited became a wholly owned sub-idiary of Johnnics at a cost to the Group equivalent to R85 for illian of Johnnics at a cost to the Group equivalent to Kos International State of the Group equivalent to the Group f which it will share with I SSAIII the export of I SSO 000 this f coal per annum for thirty years commencing in 1983. Conderable emphasis has been given during the year to expanding the Group's coal reserves both within Tavistock and else-facre within the Republic. Results have been encouraging farticularly in the case of Phoenix Colliery where the potential ow crists for an open-cast mine. The Group is now better laced to look for new coni business either for the export or omestic market and I am hopeful that coal will in time provide larger share of our income in excess of the increase which.

ill arise from the acquisition of the balance of Tavistock. The Randfontein Estates Gold Mining Company, Witwaters and, Limited and Western Areas Gold Mining Company paid abstantially higher dividends for their year ended 31 becember 1980. Subsequently, with a fall in the gold price, oth companies have paid reduced interim dividends. These rines are in the midst of substantial capital expenditure prorunmes, both to maintain and augment the ore reserves vailable to them. If the gold price rises in a sustained manner ver time then the substantial additional ore reserves that will ecome available will be of great importance because of the reater flexibility they will allow to mining operations.

Apart from Consolidated Metallurgical Industries Limited (a) the Group's industrial interests, which include Lenning oldings Limited and substantial perifolio investments in The outh African Breweries Limited, Argus Printing and Pubshing Company Limited and Toyota South Africa Limited, ad an excellent year. Excluding CMI, which has yet to declare a inidend, their contribution to Group income continued to now to importance and in the aggregate at R26.1m showed an

During its financial year to 31 August 1981 the net operating coffes from sales by Rustenburg Platinum Holdings Limited cre R266.8m as compared with R273.7m in the previous ar. Ordinary dividends were increased to 45 cents per share. ales of platinum were significantly and adversely affected in ac last quarter of Rustenburg's year when the free market ice remained below Rustenburg's price of $475 per onnec. ic high rates of interest in the United States of America held ack ant rapid recovery in the automobile industry in that mutty. Here and elsewhere other industrial demand for ultimum remained generally steady and there has been a notable recovery in the level of imports into Japan in the first seven months of this calendar year.

The board of Shangani has now announced that it intends to recommend to its shareholders that they approve a scheme of arrangement which will result in the purchase by Bindura Nickel of the mining assets of Shangani in return for shares in Bindura Nickel. In terms of the proposed agreement, Bindura Nickel will assume the whole of responsibility to provide the future financial requirements of Shangani, though the Group will continue to guarantee its share of the present loans from third parties.

This seems to me to offer a sensible and satisfactory outcome for all the interested parties and to give each benefits which would not have been available if Shangani had cootinued as heretofore. The Group has in recent years made full provision against both its investment in and loans to Shangani and there should therefore be no material impact on its accounts in the current financial year.

The outlook for the South African economy has changed significantly since last year The combination of the lower gold price, high interest rates and recession in the major developed industrial economies is likely to allow a real growth rate of only some three to five per cent compared to the admittedly exceptional rate of eight per cent last year. Comfort can be drawn from the fact that this would still be considerably better than most other countries, but the real cause for concern lies in the figures for real private consumption expenditure per capita (which measures changes in standards of living) from 1973 to 1981. Despite the increase of 6.4 per cent in 1980 and the likely increase of 2.5 per cent in 1981, the compound rate of growth over these eight years will have been less than ooe percent per annum, nor are the present prospects encouraging for 1982. For most countries that leaves a great deal to be desired, but particularly so in our case, where the disparity in incomes is so

The real impediment to sustained higher growth is the failure to turn to best account the human resources readily available to us and who are only too willing to improve their lot. The Group, in common with others, is moving towards the implementation of an integrated wage curve and considerable progress has already been made towards that objective. It is, however, important to realise that even when that is achieved (and on the assumption that all restrictions on the mobility of labourhave fallen away, which is a farcry from the present), the vast majority of our black employees will still, in practice, be denied the opportunity to move into higher positions since they will still suffer from the handicap of an inadequate education. That is the kernel of our problem and we can ill afford to cootinue to be profligate with time in acting to remove it. This is not something that business can or indeed should attempt on the scale required as it is properly the function of Government though the private sector will continue, as it has in the past, to help. Uotil such action is taken, the shortage of skilled labour will cootinue as heretofore to be the brake on the future economic performance that we could otherwise hope to attain. For the Group as for the country in the absence of a recovery in North America, Europe and Japan and in the price of gold and other exports, it is likely to be a more difficult year.

THE ESSENTLAL EARTHMAN Henry Mitchell on Gardening By Henry Mitchell. 244 pp. $12.95. Indiana University Press, Bloomington, Indiana 47405.

> By Bertha Benkard Rose Unheralded and unsung and pushed into the background, Equal Right have yet to find their place in the gar.

> > Just as Perenyi's book contains useful and practical information as well as delightful writing, so too does "The Essential Earthman," which brings to gether many of Henry Mitchell newspaper columns on gardening

Mitchell has a healthy and paramatic approach to the many difficulties and frustrations that come with trying to grow almost anything the starts, right off, telling the gardener by be defiant, expect the worst and side to the essentials. He is quoted as hering said, "It is not nice to garden any where." Somehow, I don't believe that he truly means this. If he did, he could not have written a book so where not have written a book so full of thoughts, information and the sheet joy of being a gardener.

The Earthman is a bit of a flower, snob; zinnias and marigolds receives short shrift from him. One he related to cousins, nice unless too many; the other, he says should be used as space.

The chapter entitled "Bad Trees and Good Trees" should be required reading for anyone contemplating in-planting of trees. In a rather the burst of frankness he points out that while some trees can be introduced into a garden, there are many more that should be, quite ruthlessly, chi, down. This strikes a chord in me, are was intimidated for years hy a large elm. When it finally died, much to me secret delight, my house, suddenly glowed with sun and light.

Perception

The author is perceptive, and its knows that often the little things is gardening can be the most rewarding. Because of his awesome knowledge its realizes the enormous work that goes into the growing of almost any plans. So he points out the simple pleasure of watching a squirrel select a leaf and tells us that there are many gifts of nature more satisfying than showy

Henry Mitchell is a man of streag opinions: Japanese gardens, and lawr and garden sculpture are not for him.

However, he writes eloquently of me nor hulbs, and his love and knowledge of camellias make me want to fix blooms.

ingly as ultimatums.

GREEN THOUGHTS," subtiden," is a delight. Eleanor Perenyi is a serious gardener who is also an experienced and witty author. Her horticultural knowledge, combined with her many observations on life have produced a book that is informative and fine reading.

The book is encyclopedic: "annuals." "artichokes." "asparagus." "asters" and so on, follow each other through the alphabet, but there are surprises in many sequences. A chapter willed the surprise of the sequences. ter entitled, simply, "Blues" tells much about the many flowers in the favorite of all colors, but it also speaks of Nancy Mitford, Jane Austen, Gladys Cooper and Edith Wharton, weaving them in among the hlues in a manner that makes wonderful reading "Earthworms" and "Endive" lead to "Failures" which starts with an amusing quote from Beverley Ni-chols' "Garden Open Tomorrow." "Ivy" leads to "James vs. Benson," which recounts that E.F. Benson leased Henry James' house in Susser and, while there, wrote of the mad and wooderful, lietional Miss Mapp. Unusual in a garden anthology but a sudden and welcome relief from slugs and poisons.

Many chapters in "Green Thoughts" could stand on their own as informative, fascinating essays. Particularly enjoyable, to me, is "Two Gardeners": one Lawrence Johnston, the other the better-known Ellen Willmott. Both were interesting people in their own and very different ways. The former left, as his heritage, what the author of "Green Thoughts" feels is the most remarkable modern garden in England, Poor Willmott, a great horriculturist, left no garden due to tremendous financial reverses. As with so many references in this book one would like to know more about these two people.

Old Hat

"Partly Cloudy" is another gem a treatise on inaccurate weather reports and a science of forecasting called phenology which uses the signs of nature to show coming events. The growth stages of plants and the emergence of insects are part of this science, but I saw no mention of the groundhog or the hoarding schedule of the squirrels. These are old hat perhaps, but part of my childhood teachings, which included the information that when the shad bush blooms, shad come to the rivers, and when the lilac blooms look for the weakfish to bite.

There are many chapters in this book that are wonderfully helpful to the gardener, so it makes little differ-ence that, here and there, some of the knowledge imparted will be used by few if any growers. "Three Houses," for instance, is a nice bit of the history of "adult houses" high in the foliage and of the philosophy of "the gift of privacy." However, I fear, this is hut a dream to most in the days of dwindling help and mounting costs.

There are many apt and succinct descriptions sown throughout the pages. A good tomato, for example, should look like "an archipelago broken up with lakes of seed." All of these are interspersed with knowledgeable hints on how to sow parsley and grow Belgian endive.
"Green Thoughts" ends not with zinnias but with "Woman's Place," not a happy one in the history of gardening, according to the anthor,

BRIDGE

THE oldest coup in the game, dat-ing back to the days of whist — long before bridge was thought of — is named after the English watering place of Bath. It is a simple holdup play with ace jack x when the king is led. If the suit is continued, the ace and jack both score.

It is important for the leader to know where the jack is, so the modern tendency is to lead the queen from a bolding of king-queen-10-9. The lead-er's partner is expected to clarify the position by playing the jack if he has that card.

In a regional championship an inexperienced young player found herself in three po-trump after a simple auc-tion. The diamond queen was led, and dummy and East played small cards. South looked at the queen suspiciously and remembered in time that she was entitled to an inquiry. "Does the queen mean anything special?" she asked East.

"Yes," replied East. "It calls for the unblock of the jack." "O.K.," South said as she played her jack, "but I don't think it's very

West was delighted with this devel-opment. It seemed to him that South might have begun with ace jack doubleton, and he continued with the diamond king. This was the wrong play as it turned out, but it was certainly difficult to consider a shift.

South was still upset about the first trick, and did not consider the possihilty of holding up her ace. She simply won the second trick and played a club. East held up his ace for two rounds, but it did him no good. South emerged with 11 tricks and a score of

But when the scores appeared, she found to her surprise that she had, top score.

At most other tables, three no trump had been defeated after South layed low on the first trick. West felt sure that a second diamond lead would be an error and shifted to the spade jack. This was just what East wanted, and the defense took third tricks in that suit, together with one in East and West had been looking. forward to telling a funny story about the opponent who unblocked the jack from ace-jack-x, but found themselves ohliged to tell a sad story indeed They should perhaps be accorded little sympathy.

By Jane Leavy Washington Post Service
NEW YORK — In most sports, the victors hold hands with the spoils. In running, they can do it only under the table.

For the last year, guerrilla warfare has been raging between the Association of Road-Racing Athletes a group that adventee and letes, a group that advocates open running and which established a professional circuit in June, and

ing the unspoken rule of paying athletes under the table. Alberto Salazar, who won the New York Marathon Sunday with a 2:08:13 world-best time, called those officials "a bunch of thieves" and "a bunch of hypocrites" at a press conference Monday.

For the third consecutive year, sources say, officials of the New York Marathon offered under-thetable prize money for top finishers. According to Don Kardong the president of ARRA, the prize structure for the 1981 marathon began at $14,000 for the first-place man, with decreasing inducements going down 12 places, and bonuses for setting various records. According to other ARRA sources, the prize money began at $8,000 for the first-place woman, continuing down 10 places.

Fred Lebow, director of the New York City Marathon, denies paying under-the-table prize money or bonnses.

· 'Yes'

When Allison Roe, who broke the woman's world record with a 2:25:29 clocking Sunday, was asked how much she thought that victory would be worth, she said, "I don't know, I'm not 100 percent sure. Let's put it this way, I haven't received it yet. When you try to find out about it, they're kind of

But, asked if she would accept the first-prize money and any bonuses that might go with it, she said, "Yes."

Roe, who received $4,000 for hersecond-place finish in the AARA's Cascade Run-Off last June, did not become eligible to run in New York until last week, when she agreed to place her winnings in a trust supervised by the amateur New Zealand Federation. Only then was she cleared to run in New York by the International Ama-teur Athletic Federation and The Athletics Congress (the latter is the governing body for track and field in the United States).

At the IAAF council meeting in December, officials will consider a proposal to allow athletes to accept prize money as long as it is placed in trust funds administered by their local federations.

The Dallas Times Herald said Tuesday that the athletes, tradi-tionally trained at U.S. Army facilities by Army instructors, were given tranquilizers to improve their pistol-shooting scores.

He sent each player a letter in July, saying that if they won there was no way anyone else could be voted the national champion.

"Knowing that, we can get de-stroyed," Bowden said. He did not tell that to the players.

When Bowden talked to writers, he called the schedule's heavy stretch "Oktoberfest," a festival. Soon the writers were writing about Florida State's party and the players were repeating his message to each other. After an embarrassing 34-14 loss at Nebraska, there was a meeting. without coaches, that led to an inspired week of practice. The ful-lowing Saturday, Oct. 3d, FSU defeated Ohio State, 36-27.

The next week, at Notre Dame, Florida State won again. Bowden was dressing after the game, on the place the legend of Knute Rockne was created, when he was asked if they now should make a movie called "Bowden of FSU." He "They onght to," he said.
The following Monday, the sellout crowd at the Tallahassee booster luncheon stood and cheered when the coach walked to the podium, which was adorned with a bumper sticker emblazoned, "Hail St. Bowden."

'Another Pretty Face'

Florida State was to play Pittsburgh next. "Once you see one, you've seen 'em all," Bowden told the boosters. "They're just another pretty face. The boys are used to

That Saturday afternoon, at 1:20, when the locker room door at Pitt Stadium had been closed, Bowden addressed his team. He had already told them, during the veck, that the game would be for a national championship. His voice jumped half an octave. "We're right where we were the last two Saturdays," he said. "Sitting right here like this, wondering if we're gonna win, the odds azinst you. "Offense. We'll throw the kitchen sink at 'em." He langhed, "We've got every play in the book in. We won't hold back." They never had the chance. Pitt's defense disrupted Florida State's plans and led to a 42-14 victory.

The edge was off the party, even if it still had one week to go — and last Saturday the Semmoles wound up their heavyweight Oktoberfest demolishing Louisiana State, 38-14, in Baton Rouge.

"How many weeks can you do this?" Bowden had said after the Pittsburgh game, "That's the fatal part of the schedule. It's unfair." But FSU has a consolation prize for its foray into the time: revenue of about $800,000, before ex-ments that TAC can use the trust fund money however it wants to were inaccurate. Athletes can draw "That's not too bad, is it?" said Clay Stapleton, down on the farm.

"I'm thinking that's pretty TAC said that as a member of 200d."

Coach Bobby Bowden has a mid-game strategy conference with Seminole player Blair Williams.

Series Delay Aids Both Sides

By Thomas Boswell Washington Post Service NEW YORK — Baseball got a World Series rainout Tuesday night that helped both teams.

The New York Yankees were glad that wet grounds and a gloomy forecast (borne out by heavy rains Tuesday evening) postponed matters because it became all but certain that third baseman Graig Nettles' jammed thumb would be sufficiently healed to enable him to play Game 6 Wednesday night. The Los Angeles Dodgers were perhaps slightly less delighted. Had Game 6 gone on as scheduled, third beseman Ron Cey would not have started because he still was woozy and lightheaded after being hit in the head by a Rich Gossage pitch Sunday.

His chances of playing Wednesday remained problematical.

"I felt good this morning." Cey said Tuesday. "But this afternoon changed my mind. I was not in good shape. I was relieved to hear the game was called. I wasn't even going to go to the park and try to dress. How do I feel? Let's just say that I still have my ups and downs.

"The doctors say that if I have a workout [Wednesday] and come out of it with no dizziness or lightheadedness, I can try to play. But, I assure you, if these symptoms persist, I'm not going to permit myself to take the field," said Cey, whose speech is habitually on the

No hard feelings seem to remain between Cey and Gossage. "I saw the pitch all the way," said Cey. "But by the time I began to move. it followed me like a magnet.... I remember hitting the ground in slow motion. Then it was a stupor like another world.

"Rich came over and spoke to me after the game. I have a great deal of respect for him as a player, hut I have even more respect for him now as a person,"

An irony of this Series is that are so many parallels between the two

 Both have day-to-day injured third basemen. Both have spectacularly hot first basemen — the Yankees' Bob Watson has a .500 on-base percentage and an .824 slugging average while the Dodgers' Steve Garvey is batting .450. • Both have had postseason problems in center field, where New York's Jerry Mumphrey was benched for two games (he was listed to start Game 6) and the Dodgers' Pedro Guerrero has only in the last two games started to emerge from a horrid slump.

Steinbrenner. Last weekend, as the Yankees lost three fundamentally unsound, morale-eroding one-run games in rock-hard Chavez Ravine (Watson likens it to "playing on the San Bernadino Freeway"), Steinbr-enner was almost certainly a detriment.

New York began the Series without one of its regulars — its designated hitter, which isn't being ed in this Series. When Nettles was hurt, another regular was gone. in Game 3, Steinbrenner ordered that previously injured Reg-gie Jackson, who said he was ready to play, be kept on the bench against Fernando Valenzuela. Another regular lost for a game. Then, in Games 4 and 5, Steinbrenner decreed that switchhitter Mumphrey, perhaps the steadiest Yankee all year, be benched against two left-handers. Two more games minus a starter.

The Best Thing

Yankee "punishment benchings" are over. Everybody who can play will play. To boot, Steinhrenner has managed to do perhaps the best thing possible. He made himself the butt of team ridicule by getting into a brawl with two disparaging fans Sunday night in a Los Angeles hotel elevator.

"George's light might loosen up the team a little," Lemon said, "On the plane flight back, George was taking a lot of heckling and abuse, and he took it pretty well," Lemon paused for sarcastic effect. "If we win," he said, "you know that'll be the reason."

The CLA's New Charter

WASHINGTON — I have good news today. The CIA is going to come back in all our lives. If President Reagan's executive order goes through, the agency can once again spy on Americans in this country.

There are a few people in the United States who are nervous about giving the Central Intelligence Agency this kind of power, so I will put their fears to rest by answering some of the questions being raised by the new ground rules.

Q — If you allow the CIA to operate in this country don't you violate our civil bberties? A - No, the CIA protects them. The more it knows what Americans are up to, the safer we will all be from the Commies. Q - Will the CIA agents he able to read our mail and tap our tele-

A - Within reason. But they are ooly going to read the mail and tap the phones of those people who de-serve it. The rest of us have nothing to fear.

Q — The CIA was used as a political instrument by the Nixon peo-ple. What's to prevent them being used again to "get" the administration's opponents?

A — The difference is that the men under Nixon loss their moral compass. But the people who work for Ronald Reagan are beyond

Q - How do we know this?

Luxury Muffler Devised For Snoring Women

United Press International
CHICAGO — A Los Angeles neurologist has come up with the perfect gift for the woman who snores — a rhinestone-studded mink collar.

Dr. J. Dewitt Fox introduced a contoured collar at the American Surgical Trade Association show. He said he developed the device to treat headaches and oeck pains, but later discovered it also pre-

He said it came in several versions, including the "ultimate col-lar with mink and rhinestones to wear to the opera.

Q — Doesn't the CLA have enough to do gathering intelligence abroad without bugging Americans?

A - You would think so, but most intelligence organizations know if they can operate in their own country they can justify a much larger budget.

Q - Will the CIA be able to break into your home under the new guidelines?

A — Not legally. But no one is going to make a big deal of it if an agency does so without getting an official okay.

Q — What's the worst that could happen to a CIA person who oversteps his authority?
A — He would be asked to resign, and then get a job working for Colonel Qadhafi. Q — I thought the FBI was in charge of catching spies in the United States. Why is the CIA getting into the act? A — Because there are a lot of bag jobs FBI agents are oo longer permitted to do. Since the CIA is not interested in prosecuting anyone, they can justify almost anything in the name of national se-

Q — What's to prevent the CIA from working with the Mafia or hiring Cuban gangsters to do their dirty work for them?

A — Nothing really. When you're doing a covert job, you want the best people you can get. Q — Isn't there a chance that the CIA will start off their domestic spying with the best of intentions, but as they get more and more power they could have the country into

A - It couldn't happen. The CIA is monitored by a Senate watchdog committee, and nobody in the CIA would ever lie to a United States senator.

Q — Will the press be allowed to report on what the CIA is up to in this country? - Not if Congress passes its new Official Secrets Act. You can't have a first-class domestic intelligence operation if the media are going to write about it.

Q - Then who protects us from our own secret service? A - That's like asking who protects Soviet citizens from the KGB?

Mario Vargas Llosa Of Fanaticism, Utopian' Violence

By Juan de Onis

IMA - A new novel by Mario Vargas Llosa, "The War of the End of the World," is at one and the same time a major literary work, an adventure story, a historical drama, and an inquiry into ideological fanaticism and "utopian" violence in Latin America.

"The novel takes place in Brazil in the last century when the lack of communication between two ideologies, two fanaticisms, led to the Massacre of Canudos in the backlands of Bahia," he said. "This theme fascinated me because it is an experience that every Latin American country shares."

Some of the characters are inspired by historical figures, particularly Antonio Conselheiro, a religious traditionalist who was the spiritual leader of the community at Canudos that resisted the republican forces of "prog-ress" that overthrew the Brazilian monarchy.

Other characters in what Var-gas Llosa calls his "most ambi-tious" novel are symbols of what appear to be recurrent ideologi-cal tendencies on the Latin American scene.

Utopia in America

There is a broad current of thought, going back to the Counter-Reformation, that the Garden of Eden, that the utopian dream, was somehow situated in the new world of America," said Vargas

"In modern times, in the political field, this has had fatal results. European utopians who live in countries where their revolutionary dreams are frustrated project their utopias toward Lat-in America. Didn't Regis Debray come bere to write a manual teaching us how to carry out rev-olotion quickly and with few people? This game by a student of the Ecole Normale contributed to the death of many young Latin Americans, who are still dying without looking at reality," he said,

One of the characters in "The War of the End of the World" is a wandering Scot, an anarchist with an interest in phrenology, who in his confused search for the revolutionary ideal goes to Canudos in the belief that this is an anarchist utopia when it was, in fact, a Vendée, a last-ditch resistance to change in the tradi-tional religious order.

Vargas Llosa is an enemy of dictatorships, and strongly criti-cized the military that ran Peru from 1968 until elections last year restored constitutional civil-ian government. But he is also disturbed by terrorism and revolutionary violence that grows out of theories of social redemption.

Today in Peru we have a democratic government, here are public liberties, political parties function, anyone can say what he wants. . . And there are groups here that are exploding bombs, kidnapping people, killing. Do you want a better example of ideological senselessness, of mental schemes that cloud the thinking, oot of poor peasants, bot of university professors and students," Vargas Llosa said.

The government declared an emergency in five provinces of the department of Ayacucho, sent in 600 national police, and searched the University of Hua-manga, which is believed to be the intellectual center of an extreme leftist Maoist group calling itself "Luminous Path," which advocates "prolonged war" and terrorist action to overthrow the "bourgeois democracy" now in power. More than 200 persons have been arrested since the killing of two policemen by terror-The release of Vargas Liosa's new novel, during a reception given by Seix, Barral, the Spanish publisher, was a literary event, attended by President Fernando Belaunde Terry, among others, because it was the first time that the Peruvian writer had personally issued one of his creations in his bomeland

"I have lived abroad a lot, and with the dictatorships here most of my earlier work came out first in Spain," said the anthor of "Conversation in the Cathedral,"

Peruvian Novelist Explores Roots

Vargas Llosa, 45 years old, has been living here since early this year, when he finished the novel in Washington, D.C., on a fel-lowship at the Woodrow Wilson Center. He has been producing a weekly television program, "The Tower of Babel," in which subjects range from interviews with Jorge Luis Borges, the Argentine writer, to boxers in Panama, a small country with 14 world titles.

"Both Borges and Panama's boxers are Latin American cul-tural expressions. The idea that has guided me in the television program is that culture is not something that is a bore, or ex-clusively for intellectuals, but can be made interesting for every-one," he said at the studio in his modern home, with picture win-dows overlooking the Pacific Ocean covered by a gray mist.

Writer's Retreat

Vargas Llosa, between answering a stream of phone calls, packing for a trip to Spain the next day, and editing materials for his television program, was harassed. The debonair author said he looked forward to the end of the television series after five more programs.

"I am going to go to London for a while, find some place where no one can telephone me, and write," he said. Patricia, his attractive wife, answered the telephone. "It is intercipled to interciple you at eight phone. "It is from the television. They want to interview you at six tomorrow morning," she said. Vargas Llosa groaned. "Tell them at seven," he said.

The theater is increasingly interesting for Vargas Llosa. He has a play, "A Young Woman from Tacna," on a successful run in Buenos Aires, and it will open in Buenos Aires, and it will open next month in Brazil.

He said his next writing projects include a theatrical comedy and a new novel, which will he set in a Peruvian highland village when a guerrilla movement be-

PEOPLE: Princess Grace Opposes Planned TV Biography

Princess Grace of Monaco is miffed at plans by U.S. producers to make a television biography of her life and career, starring former Charlie's Angel" Cheryl Ladd: "It has been brought to our attention that an American TV production company is proposing to make a TV program based on the life and career of Her Serece Highness," said a spokeswoman for the princess, who is the former film star Grace Kelly. "The princess wishes to make it known that this project is being done without her approval or permission and that she strong-by hopes that it will not come to pass since it is an unauthorized invasion of her privacy." The project, initiated by Ladd, is to be broadcast on ABC at a date yet to be announced. Word of the proposed TV show was telephoned to Princess Grace by friends. The spokeswoman said the palace had not been contacted by anyone connected with the project. Tandem-TAT spokeswoman Barbara Bro-gliatti said the producers had tried unsuccessfully to reach Princess.
Grace and hoped to gain her cooperation once details of the project could be revealed. "We're very sorry to hear it," Brogliatti said of Princess Grace's displeasure.

The French cancan troupe of the Moulin Rouge cabaret will dance for Britain's Queen Elizabeth II during the annual Royal Command variety show at London's Drury Lane Theatre Nov. 23, the cabaret announced in Paris. . . . Britain's Prince Andrew, the pilot of a Royal Navy helicopter in-volved in a dramatic sea rescue last worved in a dramaine sea rescue last month, has a new military assign-ment. Buckingham Palace said the 21-year-old prince, second of Queen Elizabeth's sons, has been assigned to a squadron of anti-submarine helicopters flying support for the cruiser HMS invincible. As part of his duties with the Royal Navy's 820 Squadron, the prince will he trained to drop nuclear depth charges, a Defense Ministry spokesman said.

Deng Xiaoping has a new title to add to his credentials as vice chairman of the Communist Party of the People's Republic of China he's been given the Charles Goren award as bridge personality of the year. A citation issued at the world team bridge championship at Rye, N.Y., said Deng "has long been an enthusiast for the great intellectual game of bridge. His interest has given an example to the Chinese people, who are quickly finding that bridge playing can lead to in-ternational friendship." Pope John Paul II received an unusual title — that of honorary member of the Italian Association of Som-meliers, or wine stewards. The association, which is meeting in Rome, gave the diploma to the Polish-born pontiff during his weekly general audieocc.

There is nothing especially wrong with the name McDonaly.

It just does not happen to be Gos-gory Mcdonald's name, and jo Mcdonald's way of thinking that is an important distinction. So important, in fact, that when the author picked up a copy of his latest paperback thriller and saw the name "McDonaly" printed on trip.
of each of the novel's 101 left-hand pages, he was not amused, even less so when he realized that the less so when he realized that its multiple misspelling appeared throughout the Dell Publishing Co.'s 300,000-copy first priming of the book, "Who Took Toby Ringled?" "The publisher misspelled my name more than 30 million times—I had to take off my shoes to count that high," Mcdonald said, repeating a line he used in the first of his "Fletch" mysteries in 1974. Dell did get the name right four times in each book—on the coverspine, title page and the coverspine title page a though the initial print had part for 300,000 copies, he said fores, what fewer had been printed because there had oot been sufficient demand for the book.
